OPERATIONS ON THE POTOMAC.

A Dashing Reconnoissance in the Direction of Leesburgh.

ENCOUNTER WITH REBEL CAVALRY

THE ENEMY COMPLETELY SCATTERED.

A Number of Them Killed, Wounded, and Taken Prisoners.

A Letter from Gen. McClellan to Gov. Bradford, of Maryland.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM HARPER'S FERRY.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

We have received from the TIMES and Philadelphia Inquirer's special correspondents at Harper's Ferry the following account of the reconnoissance from that point toward Leesburgh. The dispatch is dated 1 o'clock P. M.:

The reconnoitering party toward Leesburgh has just returned in fine spirits, sore-footed, on rebels' horses. We killed six of the enemy, and wounded several more; captured forty prisoners and thirty horses.

The force left the east side of Loudon Heights at daybreak on Tuesday, marching in the following order:

Sixth New-York Cavalry, (Ira Harris Guard,) Col. DEVIN.

First Brigade of Gen. GEARY'S command—namely, Seventh and Sixty-sixth Ohio.

Second Brigade—One Hundred and Ninth and One Hundred and Eleventh Pennsylvania, One Hundred and Second New-York and Third Maryland, followed by KNAPP'S Pennsylvania Battery, six guns—all under command of Gen. GEARY.

Our forces reached Hillsboro, a secesh village of some fifty houses, about noon. The cavalry dashed in, capturing Lieut. GAUBE, of the new company of rebel rangers belonging to STUART'S Cavalry, who had been guarding Snicker's Gap, but were now on scouting duty. They immediately, to the number of one hundred and twenty-five, skedaddled from Hillsboro in the direction of Wheatland.

Overtaking them near Wheatland, we opened with a battery, supported by the Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania. The other regiments deployed out in both directions. After a few rounds, the cavalry charged in splendid style, led by Lieut.-Col. MCVICALS, formerly of the Royal Artillery, full thirty yards in advance of his men. He received five bullet holes in his clothing, besides having his horse shot under him by a rebel secreted in a haystack.

The chase continued full two miles. Forty prisoners were taken, including the Captain and three other Grubbs, thus clearing out the Grubs in this Valley. Several rebels scattered among the horses, and changed their clothing. One Major, thus disguised, was captured.

Continuing the march, we reached Lovetsville at night—all citizens being driven ahead, so that they could tell no tales. Then we encamped, and started homeward the next morning, at 2 o'clock.

Our forces would have gone to Leesburgh, but they had only two days' rations.

Thus the guerrillas infesting Loudon, and appearing night before last at the river opposite Knoxville, are all cleaned out.

CASUALTIES.

Killed—James Murray.

Wounded—Sergt. Thomas French, left shoulder; John Hays—all of Co. A, Sixth New-York Cavalry. Tompkins, Co. C, shoulder dislocated by his horse falling.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM SHARPSBURGH.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22,

The TIMES and Philadelphia Inquirer special correspondents have just sent us the following dispatch from Sharpsburgh, Md.:

A prisoner, captured during the late reconnoissance, states that the enemy has not over 20,000 troops at any one point in Virginia. On account of our extended line he is necessarily obliged to scatter his forces and keep a vigilant watch all along the river.

The army is daily expecting a supply of clothing, shoes, &c. The force at the extreme right of the line in the vicinity of Hancock, has been greatly strengthened within the past two days. This has caused a movement of two or three divisions further up the river.

Various rumors are afloat in reference to the future disposition of the army. The men are desirous either to offer battle or go into Winter quarters.

Nearly three hundred soldiers, having been found in Sharpsburgh without a proper pass, have been sent to Harper's Ferry to work on roads and bridges.

Capt. P. B. SPEAR, Commissary to the First Brigade of MORELL'S Division, who was wounded on the second Bull Run battle-field, has resumed active duties. His services are considered indispensable.

Capt. J. S. CASLEON, Quartermaster to the Third Brigade, MORELL'S Division, has flattering prospects of an appointment as Paymaster in the volunteer army.

Valuable services not connected with his special department, rendered on the Peninsula, have caused Capt. CASLEON to be held in high esteem by the Commanding Generals.

His term of service dates back to the very commencement of the war, and his faithful performance of duty justly entitles him to the position he will probably obtain.

Capt. R. C. WALKER, Commissary to the Third Brigade, MORELL'S Division, has, after some weeks of absence in consequence of illness, returned to take charge of his department.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM HEADQUARTERS.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

The following dispatch is from the TIMES special correspondent at the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac:

"The following order has been issued by Gen. MCCLELLAN, and has already taken effect:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
CAMP NEAR KNOXVILLE, Oct. 13, 1862.

SPECIAL ORDER, No. 283.—[Extract.]—Maj.-Gen. A. E. BURNSIDE is assigned to the general charge of the defences of Harper's Ferry, and the Second and Twelfth Army Corps are placed under his orders for the present.

To-day continues the delightful weather we have had here for some time past. A freshet that would add five or six feet to the water in the Potomac would be worth to us a hundred thousand men to-day.

Daily drilling and practice of the whole artillery force have been resumed within the past few days for the first time since leaving the peninsula.

From the signal station on the Maryland Heights the smoke this morning was so thick that the officers could see only eight or nine miles, and that indistinctly. Rebel pickets are at Kearneysville. The camp fires were as usual from two to three miles north of Bunker Hill, to eight or nine miles south of that place, and a great number were seen this morning.

The nights are now exceedingly cold, and the soldiers in their little shelter tents are really suffering. Many, very many, are wholly without blankets or overcoats.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM FREDERICK.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct., 22.

We have received the following from our special correspondent at Frederick:

Mrs. GOFF, wife of a Lieutenant in our army, referred to yesterday in the matter of rescuing rifles from a well, is the daughter of Mr. SMITH of Woodsboro in this State—a noted Rebel.

Gov. BRADFORD this afternoon issued orders notifying the citizens of Frederick county that in consequence of the malfeasance of Dr. MORAN, certificates of exemption granted are null and void, and a commission composed of four surgeons will meet in this city on Monday next to re-examine.

GEN. MCCLELLAN TO GOV. BRADFORD.

BALTIMORE, Wednesday, Oct 22.

The following has been received by Gov. BRADFORD from Gen. MCCLELLAN.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
PLEASANT VALLEY, Md., Oct. 18, 1862.

His Excellency A. W. Bradford, Governor of Maryland:

GOVERNOR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's order, Sept. 20, in which you advert in such flattering terms to the conduct of this army in the recent battles fought upon the soil of your State. It was with the utmost pride and gratification that I received this most prompt acknowledgement of the skill of the officers and gallantry of the men of the Army of the Potomac. We felt it all the more deeply because it emanated from the Executive of a State whose inhabitants had witnessed our efforts, and whose fields were rescued from the invader. Your praise will stimulate this army to renewed efforts in the sacred cause of the Union.

Permit me, Governor, in the name of the Army of the Potomac, to thank you for your appreciation of its victories. With the sincere hope and belief that no rebel army shall again pollute the loyal State of Maryland, and committing to you as a sacred trust the remains of our gallant comrades who now rest beneath its soil,

I am, Governor, with high respect,
Your obedient servant,
GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General U. S. A.

IN FRONT OF WASHINGTON.

The Rebels not to be Starved Out—Immense Crops in Store for Them—Our Soldiers Guarding the Same—Why Lee is at Winchester—Running Off Negroes—Rebel Pickets—A Relic.

From Our Special Correspondent.

CENTREVILLE, Va., Tuesday, Oct. 21, 1862.

The troops at this point are enjoying a temporary respite from the continual reconnoissances they have participated in during the last four weeks. Gen. STAHL has obtained a temporary leave of absence, leaving Col. VON GILSA, Commandant of the First Brigade, in command, and no reconnoissance in force will be made until he returns to duty, which will be in a few days.

As the cold Fall nights are upon us, the great question among the officers of this army corps is as to the probability of going into Winter quarters here. All hope to be ordered forward and to see this rebellion crushed out before another season, but judging from the way in which matters are managed just now, the war is likely to last for an indefinite period of time. No person who has had any experience in Secessia, supposes for a moment that the rebels can ever be starved out, as some persons predict while seated about their comfortable firesides in New-York. True, the rebels are out of coffee, tea, salt, sugar and other concomitants which go to make a meal of victuals attractive, but of beef, bread, pork, corn, beans, and all the substantials, they have an abundance. In fact the army of the Union has been protecting this kind of property for the rebel Government. It is a mistaken idea that Virginia is a barren waste. Away from the track of the two armies the crops are as large and the farmers as prosperous, to all outward appearances, as they were before the war. I have visited, during the last two weeks, all of the principal localities in the valley formed by the Bull Run and Blue Ridge mountains—traveling for the most part with small forces over unfrequented routes. To one who has heretofore formed an opinion of the condition of affairs in Virginia, by following the worn-out track of the armies, the change in the appearance of everything forms a remarkable contrast. The valley to which I have referred is one of the richest grazing sections of the State. The hills are covered with cattle, and stacks of hay and fodder are everywhere conspicuous. Large flocks of sheep browse on the side hills, and the woods and farm-yards are filled with swine. Corn, wheat and oats fill the granaries to overflowing, and instead of there being any indication of the people starving, they are, on the contrary, sleek and fat, and talk treason boldly. In this one valley alone an immense crop of meat and cereals has been and is now being raised for the rebel army, and the Union army commanders are as tender about its being disturbed as they would be if located in the State of New-York. Within a few weeks all these supplies will be removed Richmondward, and then the authorities at Washington will open their eyes probably and see the great mistake that has been made. In a word, our soldiers are now acting as a guard to the Commissary and Subsistence Department of the rebel army; and unless there is a speedy change in the management of this war, they will begin to feel that they have a thankless task before them. Gen. LEE, it is well understood here, is only holding out at Winchester until he can send south the immense products of the valley of the Shenandoah and its sister valleys, and then he will have no further use for his present position. For the last few weeks the rebel supply trains have been running regularly and full toward Richmond, instead of LEE'S army, as is generally supposed; and it is about time that the Government condescended to learn something from the management of affairs in rebeldom. A portion of the army could be profitably, and should be at once, employed in gathering all the grain, cattle and horses within reach. Ninety-nine-hundredths of it all is now in rebel hands, and will eventually go to sustain the rebel army, unless the Government is aroused to the importance of preventing it. Such a blow as this would make treason unprofitable among the farmers near our lines, and would be a thrust at the vitals of the rebellion, which would be permanently felt.

RUNNING NEGROES OFF.

While at Aldie, on Thursday last, two citizens, named MOORE and BALL, came within our lines and were detained as prisoners. The first-named is a son of the proprietor of Moore's flour mills, at Aldie, on a branch of Goose Creek, and the latter is a large planter in the same town. They had "done nothing," so they said, and were neither bushwhackers nor soldiers, and were surprised at being detained within our lines when so near their homes, from which they had been absent some time. Upon being questioned closely, they admitted that they had just come from the James River, and finally owned up that they had been running off "niggers," having just taken a large gang, belonging to themselves and neighbors, southward in chains, to avoid losing them under the emancipation proclamation. I understand from various sources that the owners of this species of property throughout this section of the State are moving it off toward Richmond as fast as it can be spared from the plantations, and the slaveholders boast that there will not be a negro left in all this part of the State by the 1st of January next.

THE REBEL PICKETS.

No sooner had our forces been withdrawn from the vicinity of Aldie than the rebels advanced their pickets again in that direction. Their pickets and ours were yesterday within hailing distance, on the Green Spring road, near the village of that name. Both pickets, by mutual consent, refrain from the customary amusement of firing at each other.

THE STUART MANSION AGAIN.

While going the round of pickets yesterday, I availed myself of another opportunity to inspect the Stuart mansion at Chantilly. I was received by the host—a cavalry officer of the United States Army—with great consideration, and proceeded at once to continue my researches into the mysteries of the place. I was soon rewarded by finding the following document:

Rec'd, April 12, of Doctor David Stuart, the sum of one hundred and sixty-two pounds 7s. 3d., as part of my annuity. GO. WASHINGTON.
MOUNT VERNON.

This is indorsed in the handwriting of Dr. STUART: "Go. WASHINGTON, April 12, '87. £162 7s. 3d."

I herewith inclose the original document.

LATEST FROM THE FRONT.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

We have just received the following dispatch from the TIMES' Special Correspondent, at Centreville:

A former correspondent of the TIMES, Mr. A. H. EVANS, arrived here to-day, direct from Front Royal, Ashby's Gap and Upperville. He saw no rebel troops on the road, except a picket near Ashby's Gap, but he believes that the rebels will make their Winter quarters south of the Rappahannock.

Mr. EVANS was taken prisoner at the first battle of Bull Run, and has never been able to obtain permission to leave the rebel lines. He escaped by obtaining permission to visit Upperville.

A party of negroes arrived to-day from Culpepper. They report a large rebel force in that vicinity, but saw no troops north of the Rappahannock, except one picket near that river on the railroad. They report that all able-bodied negroes are being moved further South.

THE PIRATE ALABAMA.

What the Navy Department Will Pay for Her Capture or Destruction.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

A large number of propositions have been made to the Navy Department for the destruction of the pirate Alabama, provided a suitable reward should be offered to warrant the undertaking.

As a general answer to all such applications, it may be safely stated there is no doubt that the Department would cheerfully buy the vessel from any party capturing her, and pay half a million of dollars for her, and in the event of her destruction, three hundred thousand dollars—the latter payment, however, to be subject to an appropriation by Congress.

THE WAR IN MISSOURI.

A Rebel Band Dispersed—A Number Killed, Wounded, and Captured.

SPRINGFIELD, Tuesday, Oct. 21.

A band of rebels, about two hundred strong, were discovered endeavoring to pass South some seven miles east of Marshfield. They were supposed to be under command of Col. DORSEY, and to be going to West Plains, Ark. At 11 o'clock Monday night, they were attacked by Lieut.-Col. STUART, with one hundred men of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and routed with a loss of four killed, nine wounded, and fifteen prisoners. Our loss was one killed. The enemy scattered, and STUART is still in pursuit.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

Arrival There of the Steamship Cambria from New-Orleans.

FORTRESS MONROE, Tuesday, Oct. 21.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Fortress Monroe this morning. She left New-Orleans on the 12th inst. She had moderate weather up to the 14th when she experienced a heavy northern gale, which lasted four days. Spoke bark A. Stevens off Sombrero. Saw large quantities of drift stuff; supposed to be wrecks of vessels. Put into Hampton Roads for coal.

The Cambria brings 75 passengers. She brings papers to Oct. 11, but the main features in them are extracts from the Northern Press. She brings the United States mail, a fair freight and the following passengers:

Mrs. HERMAN, three children and servant; Mrs. G. V. GAMBLE and family, Mr. C. M. MORRELL and family, T. Thayer, W. C. Tompkins, J. Massey, J. W. Patterson, Geo. Bush, F. Fernour, S. W. Lacks, E. Wolf, A. Avinaue, G. W. Villanasca, Ashbury Reger, J. J. Lane, Thomas Cadlen, E. N. Deal, and 27 in the steerage.

The Minnesota left Newport's News yesterday, and passed down the Roads out to sea at about 4 o'clock.

The flag-of-truce-boats Metamora and New-York arrived here this afternoon, bringing upward of 50 passengers and not over 100 paroled Union prisoners—far less than was expected.

Congressional Nominations.

BOSTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

Judge J. G. ABBOTT has received the nomination of the People's Union Party for Congress, in the Fourth District.

In the Fifth Congressional District the People's Union Party have nominated Col. E. W. HINES in opposition to JOHN B. ALLEY, Republican.

ALBION, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

FREEMAN CLARKE, of Monroe, was unanimously nominated for Congress by the Regular Republican Convention, this day.

BROCKPORT, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

Hon. ALFRED ELY has been triumphantly nominated by the Republican Convention for Congress.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON.

Our Foreign Relations Believed to be in a Delicate Situation.

Thurlow Weed Going to Europe Again.

A Possibility that the French Armada will Go to New-Orleans.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

OUR EUROPEAN RELATIONS.

There is good reason to believe that our European relations are in a more delicate state than is generally supposed. As an evidence of this, it is stated on good authority that THURLOW WEED has received orders immediately to prepare for another visit on general diplomatic service to Europe. He left here to-day, but will shortly return for final instructions, and will then depart for Havre on the first steamer.

Private letters from diplomats in Paris indicate a suspicion that a French armada, with fifty thousand men on board, and convoyed by the invincible iron-clad frigate La Gloire, although ostensibly being organized for service against Mexico, will, under sealed orders, to be opened when half way across the Atlantic, assume a more northerly direction, and finally appear off the mouth of the Mississippi, under the pretext of asking a settlement of the act complained of against Gen. BUTLER by the French Consul-General at New-Orleans.

WHY THE ARMY DOES NOT MOVE.

An officer of Gen. MCCLELLAN'S Staff writes that the Army of the Potomac is prevented from making an immediate advance by the want of clothing.

GEN. SICKLES' DIVISION REVIEWED.

The review of Gen. SICKLES' Division to-day was one of the most brilliant pageants of war. Several thousand troops, mostly veterans, were formed in line about 2 o'clock P. M., near the contraband camp, by Capt. HART, Gen. SICKLES' A. A. G., to receive the high functionaries who were expected to witness the display. The steamer Martha Washington, conveying President LINCOLN and suite, including Ex-Gov. NEWELL, of New-Jersey, reached Alexandria about 2½ o'clock, and the party arrived on the ground about 3, escorted by the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, Col. WELLES' a squadron of artillery and a battery. The review was conducted by Maj.-Gen. BANKS, and in company with the President were Maj.-Gens. HEINTZELMAN and CADWALLADER, with their full Staffs, and Brig.-Gens. ABBOTH, ANGER, STAHL, SLOUGH, CASS, KANE, and many officers of lesser rank, making nearly two hundred mounted officers of all grades. The presence of the celebrated marine band added greatly to the interest of the occasion.

The review passed off most happily, and was pronounced by the President and Gen. BANKS equal to any they had ever witnessed. Each man seemed in his place, and to know his duty. Great enthusiasm was manifested, the soldiers cheering loudly for the President and the Union. Gen. SICKLES won much admiration for his soldierly bearing.

The force is composed of HOOKER'S old fighting division of three brigades, replenished by recruiting, and increased by some new regiments. The brigades are commanded by Gens. CASS and PATTERSON, and Col. BREWSTER. A large concourse was present of citizens and ladies of Washington, on horseback and in carriages.

After the review, Gen. SICKLES escorted the President with a squadron of cavalry, and all the Generals and their Staffs, through the convalescent camp, stragglers' camp, and camp for paroled prisoners, the latter of whom, some two thousand, were reviewed, and seemed in good spirits, but wanted clothes. Enthusiasm prevailed everywhere.

About dusk the President was escorted to the boat and took his leave.

PROVOST-MARSHAL AT HARPER'S FERRY.

Capt. CHURCH HOWE, formerly Quartermaster of the Massachusetts Fifteenth, at present on the Staff of Major-Gen. SEDGWICK, has been appointed Provost Marshal at Harper's Ferry and Bolivar. Capt. HOWE has been in the service since the beginning of the war and well deserves the flattering confidence reposed in him.

CAPTURE OF QUININE AND MORPHINE.

Three large boxes filled with quinine, and one box containing morphine, were seized at Pisgah Church, in Charles County, a few days since, and brought here and turned over to the Medical Purveyor. The property belonged to a man named BENJ. F. BOWLES, and was intended for transportation to Richmond. Pisgah Church is known to be a general rendezvous for smugglers of contraband goods and rebel spies. BOWLES was sent to the Old Capitol Prison by Major DOUBT. Had the owner succeeded in getting his drugs to Richmond, they would have netted him a profit of about $4,000.

GEN. MARTINDALE'S CASE.

The only witnesses examined to-day in the Martindale Court of Inquiry was Col. BARNES, of the Eighteenth Massachusetts, of MARTINDALE'S Brigade. The testimony was mainly in regard to localities, and was favorable to Gen. MARTINDALE. The accused also produced two affidavits of absent officers, proving that the retreating army was in great confusion, and orders could be heard with great difficulty. Gen. MARTINDALE said he had other witnesses, but did not deem it necessary to take their evidence, and the testimony here closed. The argument will be made at 11 o'clock next Friday.

ORDER IN REGARD TO ARMY SURGEONS.

The Secretary of War has suspended the order assigning Surgeons COOPER, MURRAY and SMITH to other duties. Dr. COOPER, who is Medical Purveyor at Philadelphia, was ordered to relieve Surgeon MURRAY, Medical Director of Gen. BURNS'S army, and Surgeon SMITH was selected as his successor at Philadelphia, and Surgeon MURRAY was ordered to report to Surgeon W. KING, at Philadelphia, as Medical Director of Transportation. Changes in the Medical Department of the army are made by the Secretary of War, on the request and instance of the Surgeon-General.

RETURN OF EXCHANGE PRISONERS.

Upward of six hundred paroled, sick, and wounded prisoners arrived here yesterday afternoon, in the steamer Commodore, from Fortress Monroe. Most of them had been confined in Macon, Georgia. Two hundred and fifty of them are to be sent to Portsmouth Grove, Rhode Island, and the rest were distributed among the hospitals in this city. They represent their treatment by the rebels as most horrible. The prisoners were captured in different battles—at Shiloh, Fort Donelson, and Bull Run. When the prisoners reached Aiken's Landing they were nearly naked, most of them being without shoes and hats.

CONVALESCENTS TO BE SENT IN SQUADS.

By order of Gen. MCCLELLAN no more men from the convalescent camp at Alexandria, for the present, will be sent to their regiments in the Army of the Potomac. Hereafter they will only be sent in large squads, according to the divisions to which they belong.

STRAGGLERS AND DESERTERS TO GO TO PRISON.

No more stragglers and deserters will be sent to the convalescent camp, but to Forrest Hall Prison, in Georgetown. Convalescents from the various hospitals are still being sent to the convalescent camp at Alexandria. The Provost guard, on average, pick up one hundred stragglers and deserters every day.

REBEL PRISONERS TAKING THE OATH.

Quite a number of rebel prisoners captured at Antietam, and in the several engagements in Maryland, have taken the oath of allegiance and been released. A number of them are now here seeking employment at their trades. Several printers are among the number.

HOSPITALS AT FREDERICK.

There are now twenty-two hospitals at Frederick, Md., which are in charge of Surgeons Weir, Bill, Thurston, Hewitt, Lewis, Wilson, Notson and Reede. Dr. JOHN J. MILEAU is Medical Director at Frederick. The hospitals are reported to be in excellent condition, and the number of patients largely on the decrease.

GEN. DIX.

Gen. DIX was in the city to-day, and with other prominent parties visited the War Department for the purpose of securing reinforcements for the Department of the South.

GEN. FREMONT.

The statement editorially made by one of your contemporaries, that Gen. FREMONT has been assigned to duty, is entirely destitute of of foundation.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

It is understood that a prominent Senator, who enjoys the confidence of the Secretary of War, has drafted a bill thoroughly reorganizing the Adjutant General's office and the Bureaus of the War Department.

SUBSTITUTES IN MARYLAND.

Maryland rebels who have fallen victims to the draft, are anxiously seeking substitutes in this District, whom they offer large bounties. We heard one of the "chivalry" this morning offer $600 for a substitute, and $1,000 have been offered and paid. As a matter of course, recruiting for the District regiments suffers in consequence.

SOLDIER ARRESTED FOR MURDER.

A soldier, belonging to the Twenty-second Massachusetts Regiment, was sent to the Provost-Marshal yesterday by Gen. STEES, charged with being a participant in the murder of Mr. GEO. WILSON, a highly respectable Union farmer of Montgomery County, Maryland. The murder was committed several weeks ago.

RELIEVED FROM DUTY.

On the 14th inst., Capt. WILLIAM ZAY was, by order of the War Department, relieved from duty on the Staff of Maj.-Gen. WOOL, and directed to report for orders to the Secretary of War, at Washington.

CAPTURE OF A SPY.

Dr. T. M. BOYLE, a notorious rebel, of Fairfax County, Va., was arrested by order of Gen. SIGEL, and sent to the old Capitol Prison to-day, on the charge of being a spy for the rebel Government.

REBEL PRISONERS.

Nine rebel prisoners of war, belonging principally to Virginia cavalry regiments, under Gen. STUART, were sent in on Tuesday, from Gen. SIGEL'S Headquarters. Among the lot was a Capt. CUMMINGS, belonging to the Ninth Louisiana Regiment, and formerly of Philadelphia. The prisoners were captured in a late reconnoissance near Thoroughfare Gap. They were sent to the old Capitol Prison.

HOTEL KEEPER ARRESTED.

A. F. KIMMELL, proprietor of the "Kimmell House" this city, was arrested on Tuesday, by order of Provost-Marshal DOEZER, for aiding in transporting contraband goods to the South.

INSANE SOLDIERS.

It is a singular fact that, in the Government Insane Asylum near this city, there are a number of soldiers and several officers whose minds have become deranged while in the service of their country. Insanity in a number of cases has been produced by wounds received in battle. The assistant Surgeon in charge of the Asylum, Dr. STEVENS, refuses to give the names of the unfortunates for publication.

A GOOD APPOINTMENT.

Gen. W. MCLANE, late Chief Clerk in the office of Capt. DANA, Asst. Dépôt Q. M. here, has received the appointment of Assistant Quartermaster, with the rank of Captain, in the United States Army. Capt. MCLANE is an officer of great energy and administrative ability, and will bring to the discharge of his official duties a large experience of army affairs, acquired not only in his late position, but in the war with Mexico. He should be detailed to some responsible place.

THE EXAMINING SURGEONS.

The Commissioner of Pensions has made the following additional appointments of examining surgeons: WM. S. SEARLE, Troy, N. Y.; GEO. G. MCKNIGHT, Providence, R. I.; THEODORE C. DUNN, Newport, R. I.

THE INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Indian Agent IRISH arrived here to-day from Dacotah Territory. He states that the depredations of the Indians on the Nebraska frontier are confined principally to raids for purposes of plunder. No murders have been committed, and most of the tribes profess to be friendly to the Government.

CONVALESCENT CAMP.

The Convalescent Camp at Alexandria now contains only about six thousand men, a great many, within the past week, having been sent to their regiments in the field.

THE BARNEY DIVORCE CASE.

The decision in this celebrated case, involving the right to a large fortune, was delivered by Judge DUNLOP in the Circuit Court here to-day.

ARRIVALS.

Gov. MORGAN, Ex-Gov. NEWELL, of New-Jersey, Hon. R. VAN VALKENBURGH and S. S. COX are in the city.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

RUMORS.

There is no apparent reason to occasion any serious consideration of the rumor afloat in New-York, that Gen. MCCLELLAN has been superseded in the command of the Army of the Potomac.

SECESH HOUSES TO BE OCCUPIED.

Orders have been issued directing the occupancy for Government purposes of property in Washington of persons known to be in the service of rebels, including five houses belonging to Commodore FORREST, two to Dr. CORNELIUS BOYLE, one to Dr. GARNETT, son-in-law to HENRY A. WISE; one to WILLIAM R. SMITH, member of the rebel Congress; one to Mr. PHILLIPS, Ex Sixth Auditor of the Treasury; one to Capt. DUNNINGTON, Ex-Chief of the Capital Police, and several others.

REVENUE DECISIONS.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has made the following decision concerning tanning of leather: A tanner who receives hides from other parties, owners, upon an agreement to tax the same by the piece or by the pound, may remove the tanned leather without inspection to such owners whenever it is ready to go forward, having first obtained and filed in his office the written certificate of the Assessor and Collector of the district in which the tannery is situated, that in their judgment such removal will not be prejudicial to the first administration of the Excise law, providing that every tanner so removing tanned leather shall make a monthly return to the Assessor of the district, number and weight of the sides or pieces of leather so removed, and provided that he shall furnish to the Assessor monthly the inspector's certificate of the weight and quality of the leather so removed during the preceding month, and that the tax shall be paid in the district where the tannery is situated.

GEN. KING.

Gen. KING has been ordered to report to Major-Gen. DIX.

CAPTURE OF CONTRABAND GOODS.

The Potomac flotilla has been doing an extensive business in the capture of contraband goods and men in rebel service. To-day a party were brought to the Navy-yard, made prisoners while attempting to cross from Virginia to their Maryland homes, and many letters were found upon their persons.

COLONIZATION IN NEW-GRANADA.

It is ascertained from a New-Granadian official source that the Government has interposed no objection to free black emigration to that Republic, the policy being to encourage the settlement of the country by those qualified to develop her agricultural and mineral resources.

NAVAL ORDERS.

Lieut. J. A. HOWELL, and Acting Master O. P. LATHROP have been ordered to the steam sloop-of-war Ossipee.

Ensign S. W. PERRY'S order to the Ossipee has been revoked.

Acting-Master PIERRE GIRARD, and Acting-Ensign ISAAC J. MCKINLEY have been ordered to the iron-clad steamer Montauk.

Acting-Master WM. CARTER has been ordered to the iron-clad steamer Nahant.

Commander BALCH has been ordered by the Navy Department to the Paunee.

Capt. GILLIS has been ordered to the steam sloop Ossipee.

Lieutenant-Commander GILLIS has been ordered to the steamer Commodore Perry.

Lieutenant-Commander BACON has been ordered to the steamer Commodore McDonough.

A MISTAKE CORRECTED.

There seems to have been an error in the announcement that Capt. JOSEPH HERMIQUES, of the Fourth New-York Regiment, was dismissed the service, as he has in his possession an order through Gen. WOOL, showing that his resignation was accepted and he honorably discharged in consequence of physical disability. The non-commissioned officers and privates of his company have transmitted to him a testimonial certified by the Lieutenant, expressing their high appreciation of him as a brave and accomplished soldier, officer and gentleman.

NEWS FROM RICHMOND.

Bragg's Campaign in Kentucky Pronounced a Failure.

AFFAIRS IN THE SOUTHWEST.

PHILADELPHIA, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

The Richmond Whig, of the 20th, contains an editorial, from which it appears the rebels have later news from Kentucky regarding previous rumors of success, and showing that the rebel army was really retreating from Kentucky instead of marching on Louisville. After expressing surprise that such false rumors of brilliant victories should have got into circulation, the Whig adds:

"This retrograde movement has profoundly disappointed and mortified our people, and dashed the fond hopes they had formed of liberating Kentucky and Tennessee. We had expected—reasonably expected—from BRAGG'S magnificent army, something more than a mere incursion to the neighborhood of the Ohio River, and something more than fruitless marches and barren battles. We had anticipated from Gen. BRAGG something more than boastful orders to his troops and sounding proclamations to the people beyond the Ohio. We had formed exalted hopes of the great expedition which he led across the Tennessee River and nearly up to the suburbs of Louisville. His long delay at Tupelo, his hesitancy at Chattanooga, his tardy advance into Kentucky, had shaken the public confidence; but few were willing to condemn so long as an opportunity yet remained for the consummation of the grand objects of the campaign. It is all over now. The Kentucky movement in the hands of BRAGG has turned out to be simply a fizzle. No other word can so appropriately describe it. It has been from the beginning to the end a brilliant blunder and a magnificent failure."

Gold is selling in Richmond at 160@170, and silver at 125@130 per cent.

The defrauding in the Commissary Department has become so common as to call forth comments, and become a general talk in the streets.

We have not yet heard of the first farmer north of the Rappahannock, who has plowed and seeded for a crop of wheat. Occasionally we hear of a few acres seeded in the counties south of and adjoining the Rappahannock Valley.

THE BATTLE OF CORINTH.

TUPELO, Friday, Oct. 17.

Paroled Confederate soldiers just arrived from Iuka say that 700 wounded have been sent to that place, and that our entire number will not exceed 1,500. Our army is in the highest spirits. Gen. POLK had a narrow escape.

Among the killed are Lieut. Col. Patterson, First Tennessee; Col. Evans, Texas Rangers; Maj. Pryor, Commissary; Capt. Cartright, of Georgia; Wm. S. May, of Gen. Claiborne's Staff.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Friday, Oct. 17.

Reports from Corinth say that the enemy have evacuated Corinth, and that Bolivar, Tenn., is being evacuated.

Great Union Meeting at Watertown.

WATERTOWN, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

The Union meeting here last evening was largely attended, in spite of the storm. Hon. JED. CLARK presided, and among others present on the platform was PRESTON KING. The addresses of LORENZO SHERWOOD, of Texas, and HENRY J. RAYMOND were highly effective. Resolutions were passed sustaining the Administration, and supporting the Republican Union State nominations as an effective war measure, best calculated to rebuke the sympathizers with treason.

Union Meeting at Geneva.

GENEVA, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

Linden Hall was filled here to-night to listen to stirring addresses from Col. HAMILTON and DAVIS DUDLEY FIELD. Col. HAMILTON gave a most thrilling account of his connection with the rebellion, and showed that the motives of its leaders were to crush the spirit of liberty on this continent. Had the people of the South known the intentions of their leaders, they would never have submitted to their dictation. It was the duty of the North to come up manfully and eagerly to the support of the President in his policy.

Mr. FIELD followed, giving a sharp and biting criticism upon the professions, the acts and the associates of those who now represented the Democracy in this State. Showed what harm to the Government an unsympathizing Governor could do. Pointed out the fact that the Convention which nominated SEYMOUR was a Party Convention, and closed with an appeal to his hearers to sustain the Union State nominations for Governor.

The speakers were frequently interrupted by hearty applause.

Marine Disaster.

LOSS OF THE STEAMSHIP MISSISSIPPI—OFFICERS AND CREW SAVED.

BOSTON, Wednesday, Oct. 22.

The steamship Mississippi, eighteen days from Montevideo for China, foundered at sea, Aug. 30, in altitude 29° S., longitude 12° E. Crew saved, and arrived at St. Helena.

The crew of the Mississippi, numbering sixty-three in all, were taken off by the bark Prince Oscar, of Guttenburg, and the British brig Minstrel, and landed at St. Helena.

Two officers of the Mississippi came passengers in the bark Mercury, which arrived at New-Bedford yesterday.

AFFAIRS IN CHICAGO.

Political Matters—The Proportion of Republicans and Democrats in the Service—A Speech by Senator Trumbull—Military Affairs—Correspondence, &c.

CHICAGO, Thursday, Oct. 2, 1862.

The political campaign in this State has opened in earnest, and we are likely to have quite an active canvass. The Opposition have been inspired with hope by the result in Ohio and Indiana, where the soldiers were not permitted to vote, and have based some hopes of success upon the fact that so much larger proportion of the volunteers are Republicans than Democrats. The vote of the new regiments in Iowa shows about the relative number from each party who have volunteered, under the new calls. Ten regiments and three recruiting stations voted as follows: Republicans, 4,590; Democrats, 1,145—or four to one. In the old regiments the disproportion is probably not so great, as the Opposition had not so early entered upon their policy of assisting the traitors by discouraging enlistments, and organizing upon the principle of opposing the Government in its efforts to put down the rebellion. This the leaders of the Democracy of this State have done. They make the Emancipation Proclamation the basis of their attacks; but covert treason, with many, is the real prompting motive of the course they are pursuing. During the last three months fully fifty thousand men of Illinois have disfranchised themselves by entering the army for the defence of the Union. Of these, it is safe to say that thirty-five thousand are Republicans. This drain gives great advantage to the Opposition, and were it not for the "War Democrats," who repudiate the action of the leaders, the "Vallandighamites" would sweep the State with ease. But as it is, we look for a triumphant election of the Republican or Union State ticket, including the member of Congress at large. Of the remaining thirteen, we look for the election of seven of the right sort. I judge that there can be no doubt as to the complexion of the next Legislature. The new apportionment gives the northern part of the State its rights in the matter of representation. As it stood before, so much more rapidly had the northern half increased than the southern, that each member of the House and the Senate had double the constituency in the one than in the other. I regard, therefore, the U. S. Senator as secure. And I notice, also, that the primary meetings and conventions are instructing their nominees to vote for GOV. YATES for that position. There is little or nothing said about any other candidate on the Republican side.

In the First Congressional District, which is composed of the County of Cook, the Democrats have nominated our present Mayor, Hon. F. C. SHERMAN, as their candidate, in opposition to Hon. J. N. ARNOLD, Mr. SHERMAN is an old resident, universally popular, and in the absence of our volunteers will give Mr. ARNOLD a close run. I look for a majority in his favor in the city, which, however, will be overcome by the country towns. Mr. S. declares himself a war Democrat, but he has not shown any peculiar anxiety about the triumph of the Union over the traitors; nor has he by his acts rendered the loyal cause any effective aid. And then, too, he is the candidate of a cabal of which the CHICAGO Times is the mouthpiece, and this should be enough to cause every one who wishes well to the Government to cast their votes against him.

Mr. LOVEJOY is likely to have some trouble in his district. As I previously intimated, Hon. T. J. HENDERSON has been nominated by a second Union convention, and is running in opposition. The Democrats have adopted him, and the Springfield Register and the Chicago Times have warmly indorsed him, which, it is supposed, will prove sufficient to defeat him. I look for the election of Mr. LOVEJOY by a decided majority, although he is running in a new district.

Senator TRUMBULL spoke to a large audience in this City on Saturday evening last upon the constitutionality of the President's Emancipation Proclamation. His speech was an able and profound argument in support of the affirmative of the question. He showed from undoubted authorities that, as a war measure, it was in accordance with both constitutional and international law—that it was merely the confiscation of property used as belligerent—and the freeing of slaves was a matter of necessity growing out of the nature of the property. The constitutional right of the Government was undoubted, and was sustained by the analagous practice of all nations. He also spoke of the effect of the measure upon the rebellion—regarding it as one of the most effective weapons that could be used in suppressing it. Our Senator is doing a good work in combating the machinations of the "Vallandighamites."

Thirty-nine regiments from this State, under the new calls, are already in the field, several of which have been "under fire" in the recent battles in Kentucky. Eleven more are armed and equipped ready to march. It strikes us unmilitary people rather strangely that the troops now in camp in the West and not needed in Kentucky or Missouri, are not hurried forward to reinforce GRANT, so as to enable him to intercept and cut off BRAGG in his retreat from Kentucky. Thirty thousand men could have been on their way by this time, which would have given GRANT a sufficient force to operate in Eastern Tennessee. BONAPARTE said the reason why he was able to beat the Austrians was that they did not know the value of half an hour in military matters. It would seem that our leaders generally studied their tactics in the Austrian school. We lack greatly in promptness and celerity of action, and vigor in execution. Mr. LINCOLN, is reported, by the newspapers, to have said that the fault of MCCLELLAN was that he never took advantage of his opportunities. Whether he said it or not, he might have said it with perfect truth of nearly all our division commanders.

There are three New-York regiments in Camp Douglas, the One Hundred and Eleventh, the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth and the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth. They ought to be somewhere else, and GOV. MORGAN should interpose with the general Government for their removal to more suitable and more comfortable quarters. There are some 16,000 men encamped here, and as the Harper's Ferry prisoners, under the cartel, cannot be even employed in drilling, they are becoming demoralized, and if kept here any length of time, huddled together, they will become very poor material out of which to form an army. It is impossible, under the circumstances, to maintain any degree of discipline—even enough for sanitary purposes, and their health is suffering severely. In some companies of the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth, one-third of the men are reported to be on the sick list. Several have been arrested in the city for penitentiary offences—desertions are frequent, and so dissatisfied are they that they have commenced burning their barracks—three extensive fires having already taken place. A part of the force now here should be removed to other quarters at once.

Lake navigation is nearly at a close for the season. Shipments, however, continue heavy, notwithstanding the advance in freights. The railroads, too, have materially increased their tariff on flour; but still they are carrying large quantities. The Central Road has already shipped about 1,100 car loads, and the Southern some 700. The receipts are large, being 17,000 bbls. for the two days ending Saturday night. Corn, too, is still coming in quite freely—averaging over 200,000 bushels daily, and wheat about 70,000, which is a falling off from last year.

The Chicago, Alton and St. Louis Railroad recently passed under the management of a new Company, which organized in this City on the 17th. JAS. P. ROBB was chosen President, and JOSEPH PRICE Secretary and Treasurer. The bonded debt of the road is $7,750,000, and the receipts for this year are estimated at $1,200,000. The financial concerns of the road are understood to be now in a more favorable condition than at any former period. Under GOV. MATTESON'S management it was nearly swamped, but has now nearly recovered, and is taking a position among our best paying roads. The freighting business of the Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne Road has increased so largely that a new freight-house of brick and iron, 345 feet in length, is being erected in this city.

A lot of 3,000 head of cattle arrived here Saturday, from Southern Missouri. They were driven up through the State to Iowa, and thence from Burlington to this city by rail. But how they managed to escape the clutches of the guerrilla bands, is a mystery. Their safe arrival here, however, shows a better condition of things in Missouri than could have been expected. The pork-packing season is about commencing. From what I can learn, I judge that the business will be even more extensive than last year, when the aggregate reached about 550,000 hogs, the largest number ever packed in any one market. The receipts are now from 8,000 to 10,000 daily. If we continue to have as many troops encamped here as now, the number of beeves shipped East will be materially lessened. The quality of the cattle seen in the yards this Fall, is below the usual average. Currency continues plenty, and general business, judging from the life and activity in the streets, never was better. Many buildings are going up in this city this Fall, and "To let" is scarcely seen.

THE SEASON OF THE VINTAGE.

The Croton Point Vineyards—Their Resources for Wine, &c., &c.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Now, that granaries are bursting with the harvesting of the Summer's generous growth, and the Autumn is touching with wary finger the wealth of forest and orchard, and carefully-tended garden spots, the vineyard, with its drooping clusters, claims our admiration. The wine-growers carry cheerful faces now, for along with the luxuriant abundance that has marked the growth of other fruits, the grape is worthily conspicuous. The hillsides of La Belle Riviere, and the southern slopes just off from the mad Missouri, sends us their brands of "Catawba" still, or sparkling, their sharp "red wine" and mellow native brandy; but in all these lurks a touch of grossness when compared with the home growth of our Croton and other vineyards. The "Union" wine, which, aside from its patriotic signification, is made up of a union of the two popular growths of Isabella and Catawba, is the unadulterated juice of the berry.

Having visited the Croton Point vineyards while the luxuriant harvest was at its height, some things were observed which you may find noticeable. Almost within sight of Manhattan Island, a narrow point projects suddenly from the main land into the Hudson, whose waters wash its west bank, the Croton River forming its eastern boundary. This grassy, well-wooded point divides the river into two bays—the one lying above called Haverstraw, and the one below, Tappan Zee—names whose origin needs no explanation to New-Yorkers. Upon the opposite shore of the Hudson there are wild mountains, frowning darkly, and bristling with rocks, upon this saucy little point making out so boldly into the middle of the river, and threatening to come clear across and bloom and blossom about their very base; but the rural hamlets peeping out from the cultivated valleys preserve the balance of cheerfulness, and the mountains frown on in silence, and the saucy little point glories in the admiration of passing voyagers, and entertains by shoals her friends, the shad, the perch, and striped bass, that play about her pebbly borders to the music of dashing spray and whispering pines. She flings a breath of redolence to the peaceful hamlets, and sighs through all vineyards for the desolate, grim old mountain. Between forty-five and fifty acres upon the Point are now covered with richly bearing vines. After many unsuccessful efforts to perfect foreign varieties, Dr. UNDERHILL has settled upon the two familiar staples, the Isabella and the Catawba. These, he is persuaded, meet—all things considered—the demand for table, for general market supply, and for wine. The successful cultivation of these sorts has been carried on since 1834, and his plan is quite different in the rearing and training of the grape from that practiced in Europe, and upon our western border. He does not wind his vines around upright stakes, as is common, but he trains them along wires which are secured to posts some seven or eight feet high. The strain upon these posts is so great that they are driven four feet into the ground.

The plants are never allowed to be forced, either in the nursery, or afterward in the vineyard. This would, indeed, produce large sap vessels, but would render the quality inferior, and subject the plants to "Winter kill." The larger the sap vessels the greater the quantity of water, and the less the saccharine element, and, necessarily, the poorer the wine; for what dilutes the substance of the berry dilutes the wine. In order to concentrate the desirable qualities, the vines are subjected to a Winter as well as a Summer pruning. During the early Summer, after the berries are fully formed, a thorough pruning takes place. Every extra shoot, besides many hundreds of young bunches of fruit, are lopped off, leaving the whole strength of the vine to transfuse the remaining clusters. At the present season of the year, or earlier, when the crop is in full perfection, men accustomed to the cultivation of the grape in Europe are employed to garner it. The bunches are carefully supported while the pruning-knife does its work, and the rich masses are carried by huge basket loads into the "fruit house," where woman's more delicate touch is brought to bear in culling every defective berry from each cluster, and placing them one after another in layers between light wood slats, with which the receiving-box is supplied. This box is then stored away for preservation till the market demand shall reach it. Baskets for ready use are also at hand, provided with wooden lids, which serve to transport the fruit to the city to supply the immediate demand of fruiterers, grocers, &c., &c. The transportation is always by means of steamboat, the jarring of railroad being considered damaging to the mellow fruit. Beside this immense supply to the fruit market of New-York City and vicinity, there are hundreds and hundreds of bushels made into wine, and stored away in casks containing 800 gallons each. These occupy a row of hillside cellars, or vaults, arched, commodious and cool, with every conceivable adaptation to their use. In one of these cellars the wine press is situated. It is a disappointingly small affair, but one has to remember the slowness and gentleness with which it acts upon its quantum of grapes, and with what perfection it expresses their delicate virtues. The work is not hurried, and the pressure upon the mash is cautiously regulated. Perhaps this accounts for their being no skin flavor nor indefinably gross taste about the several varieties of Croton Point wine. The great casks are fed by nose running from the vat, and after age has laid his seal of excellence upon them the contents are drawn off in bottles and garnered in the great cellars below the general dépôt in Astor-place. The great casks and lesser barrels employed are all the work of home laborers; all the mechanical appliances of the place are from the workshops upon the grounds. Coopers, blacksmiths, carpenters, &c., are constantly employed.

GROUND MOLE DOGS.

A trial to the spirit of wine growers is the ground mole. For the last twenty years it has been an increasing and much neglected evil all over the country. In Germany and other old countries of Europe, men are regularly elected whose business it is to exterminate this nuisance. They have numerous traps wherewith to make their raids effectual; but DR. UNDERHILL having no such resource, and being, withal, a bit of a Yankee, has trained a band of little dogs, who let daylight in upon these stealthy burrowers in an entirely irresistible manner.

THE PLUM-TREE LAKE.

These grounds of Croton Point were, naturally, largely composed of mineral substances; consisting principally of fine granite, silex, oyster shells, &c., &c., combined with which was very little of vegetable matter. To supply this ingredient large alluvial deposits have been removed from near the mouth of the Croton River, leaving an excavation which has been filled to the forming of a beautiful lake, into which, by a sluice way, the choicest fish, as yellow and Croton-striped bass, white perch and sunfish make their way and are easily caught.

The main feature of this lake is, however, its complete border of plum trees, so planted as to hang directly out over the water. This plan is the result of experiment and conclusion arrived at by the Doctor, that the insect known as the "curculio," whose ravages have defeated the utmost care of plum-growers, will not sting the fruit that hangs over water. The plums, when fully ripe, are gathered in boats that moor immediately under the branches. A very large crop has been gathered here at times when an utter failure has marked the country elsewhere. A nectarine pond is commenced upon the same principle.

Beside the almost illimitable variety of less important fruits, the monotony of the vineyards is relieved by orchards of Newtown pippins, the rich apple quince, pears, &c., &c. As for mammoth pumpkins—seedlings of other climes, both tropic and temperate—it is not consistent here to speak; but a visit to a Hudson River vineyard, with all its glorious resources of hill-side, valley, river, and mountain view, is something strangers from afar take delight in accomplishing, and our own citizens must be proud to enjoy.

End of the Cotton Famine in England.

From the London Daily News, Oct. 6.

The day was sure to arrive when the general inability to believe in a supply of cotton from other sources than the American Cotton States must give way before the facts. That day seems to be near at hand. At the end of last week the cargoes from India began to arrive. Upward of 10,000 bales from Bombay came in during three days, and the quantity from that port actually at sea and at Liverpool was found to be about 397,000 bales; so that MR. WILLIAMS, whose promises were held to be rash when he spoke of 400,000 bales, appears to be fully justified in the hopefulness of his tone. The next disclosure was, that we have a prospect of a supply, in 1863, of 1,630,000 out of the 4,000,000, which is the largest quantity desired at the ordinary rate of prices. This amount will be just double the quantity used per week for the last three months; and thus it would seem that the worst must be past. At the recent high prices, the weekly average taken by the trade has been 15,278, and the promised supply, independent of any change in American affairs, will yield 31,346 bales per week. The sources of this supply are India, the Brazils, Egypt, Turkey, Greece, Italy, chance cargoes from America, and "other sources." These "other sources" are credited with only 25,000. Considering that the West Indies are included under this head, it is reasonable to hope that the supply may turn out to have been underrated even for the coming season. The reports from Jamaica are in the highest degree encouraging, both as to the flourishing condition of the growing crop and the rapid increase of the area devoted to cotton. In Guiana and Demerara the proprietors are setting heartily to work to procure the the requisite labor, which may probably be supplied from the United States. Agricultural machinery, of the highest order, has been sent out to Porto Rico, which is expected to supply a large quantity, not less than the produce of 2,000 acres, next year, and the quality of the West Indian cotton is declared to be scarcely short of the highest rates of American. Already we see that, as time passes on, we find ourselves under the process of being weaned from our obstinate reliance on the Slave States; and from month to month we shall learn to give up the irrational hope of any settlement in America which can restore the old state of affairs.

THE BATTLE AT CORINTH.

Pursuit of the Rebels—Congratulatory Order of Gen. Hurlbert.

Correspondence of the Chicago Times.

JACKSON, Tenn., Wednesday, Oct. 15, 1862.

The records of the recent defeats of VAN DORN and PRICE are incomplete without something of a statement of the doings of the army under Gen. ROSECRANS, sent in pursuit of the enemy.

The division under Gen. MCPHERSON left Jackson on Friday night, and consisted of the Twenty-ninth and Thirty-first Illinois, the First Kansas, and Seventh Missouri Infantry, and a part of Col. BISSELL'S Engineer Regiment, and went by rail to within ten miles of Corinth, whence they started on a rapid march for that place. Gen. MCPHERSON'S Staff consisted of Capt. LIEB, Dr. POWERS and GEO. COOLBAUGH, General Railroad Freight Agent, volunteer aids. The forces were divided into two brigades, commanded by Col. LAWLER and Col. STEPHENSON. At Bethel they were joined by Col. HURST'S Tennessee Cavalry. Your correspondent accompanied them on this trip. They arrived near Corinth at about the time of the closing of the battle in that town on Saturday, and were here joined by the Fifth Ohio Cavalry and POWERS' Battery of artillery, and were ordered as the advanced division in pursuit of the retiring forces of the enemy. MCARTHUR'S, STANLEY'S, DAVIS' and MCKEAN'S Divisions, which had been in the fight at Corinth, were also put in marching order as quickly as possible, and all were started in pursuit.

MCPHERSON'S Division returned to this place yesterday, and I am enabled to learn some particulars of their movements. The advanced division came upon the rear guard of the enemy at Chewalla. They were drawn up in line of battle, when a sharp engagement occurred between the skirmishers, the enemy falling back, and, after two shots from their artillery, they suddenly decamped. The pursuit was renewed and continued till night, when our pickets came upon the rear of the enemy on the bluffs skirting the Tuscumbia River. Heavy skirmishing was carried on during some time, the First Kansas losing one Lieutenant killed and seven men wounded. The enemy were driven from their position, and our wearied troops encamped on what is called the Mountain. MCARTHUR'S Division came up during the night, and took part in the further advance movement.

On reaching the bridge over the Tuscumbia the next morning, it was found that the enemy had succeeded in crossing the same, and had burned it. Our troops, however, were soon across, and rushed upon the enemy with great energy, who made every possible exertion to effect their escape, throwing away their arms, tents, camp equipage, officers' baggage, and leaving eleven guns, horses, wagons, blown-up caissons, and everything that impeded their march. In fact, for ten miles between the Tuscumbia and the Hatchie Rivers, the ground was literally strewn with the equipments and plunder of an army. Several hundred prisoners were picked up in this ten-mile march. They were in a very destitute and hungry condition. Coming upon the Hatchie on Monday, it was found that the enemy had just crossed, and left the bridge burning. In two hours the Engineer Regiment had the bridge repaired, and our army were in full chase again, driving the enemy through Jonesboro, and encamping there that night. The pursuit was renewed in the morning, and the cavalry pushed them rapidly through Ruckerville. At this point the Seventh Kansas Cavalry joined our forces. A faint attempt to make a stand was made by the rebels beyond the town, but a few shells sent them on their best gait for Ripley, where another attempt to fight was made, which lasted just long enough to get one fire and one dash after them, when they disappeared in all directions, and their scattered fragments are supposed to have made the best of their way to Holly Springs. MCPHERSON encamped three miles beyond Ripley, and here the pursuit ended. The rebel army organization had been completely broken up. But a small fragment was left to make their way to Holly Springs, in the most destitute and deplorable condition. We had a thousand prisoners, any quantity of small arms, and it is said DAVIS' Division brought back to Corinth thirty pieces of artillery. All their camp equipage, baggage, stores, and everything of personal effects fell into our hands.

The country through which our army pursued the rebels is completely devastated, stripped of everything the people had to live on, by the wants of the enemy; and not only that region, but others nearer our lines, will soon be calling upon humanity for something to keep them from starving. Rebel prisoners state that PRICE started for his attack on Corinth with 60 pieces of artillery, and escaped with 30; that VAN DORN had 60 pieces, and escaped with 10 or 12; and what of these have not been brought in were probably buried.

For this energetic pursuit Gen. MCPHERSON has been made a Major-General, and, I think, worthily so. He is a man of great energy and perseverance, and I shall be mistaken if he does not make a distinguished mark before this war closes. He has been tied up for several mounths as the Superintendent of the railroads in this part of the country, but is now relieved of that duty, and to-day takes up his quarters and command at Bolivar.

Gen. ROSS and his excellent staff passed through here this morning en route for a twenty days' visit at home.

Gen. HURLBERT has issued the following order in reference to the battle of Hatchie:

HEADQUARTERS FOURTH DIVISION,
DISTRICT OF WEST TENNESSEE,
BOLIVAR, Tenn., Oct. 8, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 112.—Officers and Soldiers of the Fourth Division—Comrades in battle, partakers of the weary march and the long watches, by your discipline and courage the victory has been won, and the title of the "Fighting Fourth," earned at Shiloh, has been burnished with additional splendor on the Hatchie.

We were ordered on a forlorn hope to the aid of our beleaguered brothers in arms at Corinth. The march was arduous—the undertaking desperate. My orders were to reach ROSECRANS at all hazards, and relieve him or perish.

By the blessing of the God of our fathers and our country, the forces which assailed that indomitable garrison at Corinth were scattered and broken by their invincible courage before our turn came. But there was yet work for the "Old Fourth."

The heavy mass of the enemy were retreating by the State-line road, when, after crossing the Muddy, we met them. Each arm of this division gallantly cooperating with the other, cavalry, infantry and artillery—over a rough and dangerous country—over hill and through ravines—forest, thicket, and a desperate enemy made no breach in the serried advance of this command. Aided by your brave comrades of the Sixty-eighth Ohio and Twelfth Michigan, from Gen. Ross' command, field after field was swept, position after position seized and occupied, until the crowning struggle of the day came on for the occupation of the high grounds east of the Hatchie. The bridge across that stream was carried at a charging step; the work of the artillery was done; that of the infantry commenced in deadly earnest.

Major-Gen. ORD, a stranger to you, but to whom the division, by its well won reputation, was no stranger, and who had hitherto led the advance, was struck at the bridge and disabled; the command then devolved upon your old commander.

By misapprehension of the nature of the country across the Hatchie, a large portion of the division had been massed in impracticable ground on the right of the road and exposed to a terrific fire of canister at short range. That you bore it without the possibility of active return, speaks well for your discipline.

Knowing the ground, I immediately determined to throw out the main force to the left, crown the hillside, and flank the enemy. And it is among the proudest moments of my life when I remember how promptly the several regiments disengaged themselves from their temporary confusion and extended to the left, and with what a will they bent themselves to conquer the hill. In twenty minutes all was over, the crest was gained and held, the artillery rapidly in place, and the field of Matamora was won. The broken fragments of the Confederate army recoiled before your solid advance; their main line of retreat was cut off, and their troops forced over the broken ground east of the Hatchie.

Our duty was accomplished. Our wounded, the bloody witnesses to the desperation of the fight, were to be cared for. Already the victorious column of ROSECRANS was thundering on their rear. It was my duty to bring in the forces that remained to me.

You have returned to camp. No colors lost—not a man or a gun missing. It is a triumph, and you, and I for you, have a right to be proud.

With you in this achievement were associated the Sixty-eighth Ohio and Twelfth Michigan Regiments; they were worthy to be with you, and their conduct receives the praise of their commanding officer.

And now the necessities of the service remove me from the immediate command of the Fourth Division. A promotion won by your courage and discipline removes me to a larger command.

I wish you to understand from these, my parting orders, that I know full well that no regiment in my old division desired to be under my command when we met at Doneison; the reason why I know well, but care not to tell now. Your respect I conquered at Shiloh—your regard I hope to have acquired since.

Give to the officers who may succeed me the prompt obedience, the same steady devotion to duty, and you will make me, wherever I am, proud of the high reputation of the Fourth Division.

Remember, every man and officer, that I here again publicly acknowledge that whatever I may have of military reputation has been won by you, and that I wear it only as coming from you; and that any misconduct or want of discipline on your part will grieve your old commander. Remember that I place my honor, as well as your own, in your hands, and that, if I find a difficult place that must be held, I shall call for the Fourth. I have no fears how you will answer.

Our dead, our glorious dead! the joy of victory is dimmed when we think of them; but they have died as they would wish—died in defence of the Union and the laws—died bravely on the red field of battle, with their unconquered banner over them. Their comrades will avenge them.

And when at last our victorious flag shall float over the national domain, reconquered and united, and the weary soldier shall forget his toil in the endearments of home, around your firesides, and among your children and your neighbors, you shall recite, as part of your glorious history, how you swept the rebel hosts, with every advantage of position, across the Hatchie, and crowned the opposing hill with a wall of fire and steel that repelled the chosen troops of VAN DORN and PRICE.

Infantry, artillery and cavalry of the Fourth Division, and your well-deserving companions of the Sixty-eighth Ohio and Twelfth Michigan, you have done your duty, each in his place, and each at the right time. You have satisfied your General, and the country in due time shall know what is due to each of you. I bid you, for a while, farewell. Officers and men, continue to deserve your lofty reputation, and then, as heretofore, you will receive the approbation of your General and strengthen his hand in the performance of his duties.

S. A. HURLBERT, Major-General.

The following is a list of wounded in the Twelfth Michigan at the battle of the Hatchie: Lieut. Chas. E. Howe, Co. I; Corp. Wm. Fellroe, Co. M; D. O. Inglieright, Co. I; S. P. Davidson, Co. I; Levi Sherman, Co. B; Martin Cotrell, Co. E; Sergt. John Crofoot, Co. E.

The Twelfth Michigan was very fortunate when it crossed the bridge. The rebel artillery fire just went over their heads, and their musketry fire fell at their feet. Adjt. CHARLES BISSELL had a very narrow escape, a ball tearing away a portion of his cap. He was unwell, and ought not to have been on the field, and he is now lying quite sick from the effects of the fatigues of that fight and his march to Grand Junction and back.

Gen. HURLBERT is now in command of this division, with his headquarters at Jackson.

The enemy are said to be fortifying Holly Springs, and are gathering the new conscripts destined for that army there, to the number, it is said by prisoners, of 50,000. Around that town will probably be the next, and I hope the last, battle in the Southwest. G.

MASSACHUSETTS POLITICS.

Gov. Andrew Accepts the Gubernatorial Nomination.

BOSTON, Oct. 18, 1862.

Hon. A. H. Bullock, President of the Republican State Convention:

MY DEAR SIR: I am reminded that until now I have left unanswered your letter of Sept. 12, apprising me of my nomination for reelection, by the Republican State Convention held on Sept. 10 at Worcester. This delay I am sure you will pardon, since the subject matter is so far personal to myself that I felt entitled to place it on the file of those things which, in the pressure of contending cares, might stand deferred with the least inconvenience to others. Meanwhile, silence was, in itself, an acceptance of the nomination.

And now I beg leave, my dear Sir, to avail myself of this opportunity to present, through you, my sincere acknowledgments for this repeated assurance of favor, and to express my hearty gratitude for the generous consideration with which the people of Massachusetts have received and seconded my humble efforts in their service.

Called, two years ago, to occupy the chair of the Chief Executive Magistrate of the Commonwealth—uninstructed by any experience of office, save that of one year's service in the lower branch of the Legislature, I early found myself charged by the course of national events with duties novel, sudden, vast and admitting no delays, without a precedent for my guide, and with no similar previous experience of any other person to assist me. Having long studied the character of that peculiar organization of society which distinguishes the rebel States, I was not surprised by the portents of the Winter of 1860 and 1861. In addition to the public manifestations making clear to my own mind the desperate atrocity contemplated by the rebel leaders, I had already been distinctly warned by the private conversation of one of the eldest and most distinguished of their number, that the slaveholding States had reached a settled determination not to remain longer in political relations with our own, and having once seceded therefrom, not to return until the principle of majority Government should be changed by a new distribution of political power, nor until the New-England States should repeal all laws by which Slavery was forbidden within their own borders. It seemed already plain, therefore, long before the fall of Sumter, that the Federal Union was to be assailed, the Government itself overthrown, and we to the bitter end levied and maintained against Democratic Republican liberty and the constitutional forms under which it was defined and preserved. The scheme involved a dissolution of the Union as the first fact to be accomplished, to be followed by a reconstruction on the basis of a new distribution of political power. It involved, as the second fact to be accomplished, the abolition of the majority principle in our Government, or in other and plainer words, the subversion of Democracy. And finally, it involved the legal establishment of Slavery in all the States now free. The dissolution of the Union, the subversion of Democracy, and the nationalization of Slavery—these are the three acts in the damnable drama of treason and rebellion, included in the original conspiracy, of which new and cumulative evidence is found in the words of Mr. VAN BUREN, recently spoken in New-York, in support of the election of Mr. SEYMOUR, counseling a voluntary dismissal of the rebel States, read in connection with the words of Mr. PETIT, of Indiana, spoken on a similar occasion, declaring the universal establishment of Slavery, in all the States, to be the appropriate means of ending the rebellion. Meanwhile a body of political Bourbons, such as are found in every people—who cannot forget, and who will not learn—play half-consciously into the hands of the conspirators, by crying down every earnest, devoted and zealous public servant, civil or military, who delivers a telling blow against the public enemy, and by opposing every positive act or decree which weakens his power—substantially begging of JEFFERSON DAVIS and his confederates to name the terms of the concession and humiliation on which they will consent to return and govern the country without substituting a new name and a new flag.

Now—for one humble citizen of the American Union, for one son of the ancient Commonwealth which guards the ashes of the Pilgrims, which cherishes the venerable cradle of our infant Liberty, and on whose rocky foundations are the earliest Revolutionary battle-grounds where that Liberty was the prize for which our fathers perilled or laid down their lives—I am ready not only day by day to renew my own allegiance, but with proud and high defiance to proclaim the eternal fidelity of Massachusetts to the ideas of her origin, and the traditions of her history. With an immortal faith in Right, and an undying hate of Wrong, Massachusetts will pursue her or right career—nor will rest, nor be content until the conspirators shall be overwhelmed, their armies conquered, their schemes forever frustrated, and the Union, Liberty and Democracy reëstablished on sure foundations, defying all the shocks and snares of fate and time. But, whether all this is to be the work of later day, the brave endurance of our heroes on the field, and the patient hearts of their people toiling at home, will finally reap a rich and enduring reward. Peace, when it comes, will be secure. We shall hear no menaces of Disunion hereafter, to scare people out of their manhood; and we shall hear no more that the fear of man is the beginning of wisdom. The industry and ingenuity of a free people will not hereafter be confronted by the brutal and devastating influences of Slavery contending for the mastery of capital over labor in the new lands and virgin soil of the nation. Immigration of free white laborers, carrying with them the humble gains of their industry, will be possible into States from which Slavery has hitherto banished even their own sons, driven by that monopoly of land which Slavery creates, away from fields, and mines, and waterfalls, and a thousand natural sources of wealth denied to them and unimproved by their possessors. The States which now hold slaves, never yet cultivating more than a sixth part of their cotton land, nor one-fiftieth part of their whole soil, will beckon back to the shores of the Gulf, to their natural climate and its attractions, social and industrial, the poor refugees from Slavery now among us, who, with an instinct of their destiny as pilgrims and strangers in the North, seldom purchase land or strike root deep down into Northern soil. A competition of colored labor from the South against the laborers of the North, here at home, will be forever prevented by the only means by which it can ever be rendered impossible—by rendering it possible for the colored man to live as a freeman in his own home, instead of being driven out, as he now is, to seek refuge in a climate from which he always retires, when he can, to warmer latitudes. The hatreds and prejudices of race will melt away when consciousness of injustice shall cease to engender them, and when the freedom to migrate according to natural attractions, the instincts of race and the interests of individuals, shall render possible the separation of all those who may be mutually repugnant. When society in two-thirds of the States this side of the Rocky Mountains shall cease to be swayed and demoralized by speculators in lands, slaves and politics, then manufacturing New-England, with her ingenious and untiring artisans, whose intelligent labor has made New-England so rich and great, will find new markets for her wares and fabrics—a hundred purchasers to one—where all laborers are free to work for their wages, and where the soil shall be open to all purchasers.

With these views I hail the recent Proclamation of the President. If emancipation is deemed an evil by the rebel States, then let the first day of January find them peaceable, loyal and submissive to their duties. If they still remain at war with the Union, then let the Government and the people see to it that rebel masters cease to make compulsory rebels of their servants. The greater relation of the subject to his Government absorbs all the minor relations of individuals to each other; and the colored man, who in the sense of the Constitution may be "a person owing service or labor," under the laws of a particular State, to some other person therein, is still a subject of the National Government, owing the supreme duty of allegiance, notwithstanding his civil or social disabilities created by local laws. Nor is it endurable that his rebel master, who is only another subject of the same Government, should be allowed to impress on him his own treasonable will. Their Government, older and more worthy, possessing rights and claiming duties more comprehensive than theirs to each other, demands, and ought to coerce, in time of war, the obedience and fidelity of both.

Consecrating myself to the performance of my own part in this work before us, devoting thereto whatever is left to me of life and strength, and leaving it in solemn charge to my children, if, when I taste of death, it shall remain unaccomplished—conscious of no fear but the fear of God—I desire to stand in my lot, wherever it may be cast, as a faithful servant of a cause whose service is its own reward.

If it shall please the people of Massachusetts to ratify the nomination of your Convention, I will endeavor to address myself to the duties which will ensue, in the same spirit and the same purpose with which such duties have thus far been performed. I cannot promise greater effort, more industrious, devoted, self-forgetful, independent, or painstaking service of the State. But within the limitations of whatever power I may possess, and in the light of the experience of the past, it will be my happiness and pride, as it is now my too great honor, to devote my humble efforts to the duties of the place I occupy. And may God grant that the lengthening shadows of the next declining year may softly veil the sorrows of a people penitent, hopeful and serene, amid the reminiscences of the trials through which they shall have passed, and in the contemplation of peace, honor and happiness restored.

I am, faithfully, your friend and servant,
JOHN A. ANDREW.

GEN. DEVENS ON THE FIELD.

WASHINGTON Co., Md., Oct. 15, 1862.

DEAR SIR: I regret that I received no intimation that my name was to be used before the People's Convention, previously to the time the nomination was made. Had I known it earlier, I should have taken immediate steps to prevent such steps.

In the field, in the service of the country, to whose cause, that of constitutional liberty, I have at least endeavored to devote myself with all my energies, no position could be so congenial to me as that which I now occupy in the great work of suppressing a rebellion, more gigantic in wickedness than even in its proportions, and of restoring and maintaining the rightful supremacy of the Constitution.

It has been my earnest wish since the commencement of the conflict, that as no soldier inquires into the politics of the brave comrade who fights by his side, glad only that he is sustained by a stout heart and a strong arm, so no citizen should seek to know politically more of another than that which concerns his devotion to the imperiled Union; and that, forgetting party lines and party issues, even those in ordinary times of gravest importance, we might cordially unite to "sustain and support the Government, the Constitution and the laws, and aid the chosen and constituted head of the nation, the President, in his patriotic and self-sacrificing labors to save the country and put down rebellion."

That it is desirable to make this effort in Massachusetts, the People's Convention, embracing in its members representatives from the various political organizations of the State, among whom I recognize the names of many who, in this bloody struggle, without feeling it a sacrifice, have laid upon the altar of the country the most precious of offerings, has decided.

I have received with the profoundest feeling, the views of such an assemblage, and, recognizing the right of the citizens of Massachusetts to command the services of each and all their fellow-citizens in times of public peril, in everything not inconsistent to duty to the country, I do not feel at liberty to disregard such an expression of the wishes of those whose judgment I am bound to respect; and I shall, therefore, leave the whole matter to the decision of the people, confident that in their action they will have due regard to the best interests of the State and Nation, in the fearful crisis through which our republican institutions are now passing.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
CHARLES DEVENS, JR.

Hon. LINUS CHILDS, President of the People's Convention.

Cases under the Excise Law.

IMPORTANT DECISIONS OF COMMISSIONER BOUTWELL.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has given an important decision in relation to stamps for bank checks and legal documents. The following correspondence sets forth the facts:

NEW-YORK, Oct. 13, 1862.

SIR: Will you do me the favor of informing me whether, when a bank certifies a check (properly stamped by the drawer) by the paying teller marking it or writing his name across it, this is a certificate requiring a stamp under section one hundred and ten, schedule B, of the "Act to Provide Internal Revenue," &c.?

And if it is such a certificate, what stamp does it require?

When the Clerk of a Court certifies a paper to be a copy by marking the same "A copy," and signing his name, is a stamp necessary, &c.?

When an instrument contains agreements of various kinds, each of which, if separate, would require a stamp, is it sufficient to affix one stamp of the highest value required for any one of the united agreements, or must a stamp equal in value to the aggregate amount of all the stamps required for the different agreements, if separate, be affixed?

Ex. qr. Does a power of attorney authorizing the sale of stock, to vote at an election, to collect rent, require a stamp of $1 or of $1 60?

Ex. qr. Does a mortgage containing a power to sell the mortgaged premises, require a stamp for the power in addition to those required for the mortgage?

Your obedient servant,
LEWIS L. DELAFIELD,
No. 49 Exchange-place.

To GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, Esq., Commissioner, &c."

Mr. Boutwell's Reply.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Oct. 16, 1862.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant has been received and its contents noted.

In reply I have to state that the certification of a bank check by the paying teller's marking it, or writing his name across it, does not come within the meaning of the law relating to certificates, and is not, therefore, subject to stamp.

When, however, the clerk of a court certifies a paper to be a copy by marking the same "copy," and signing his name thereto, it will be necessary for him to affix a ten cent stamp.

Respecting your third query, I have to state that I am not prepared to give you an answer without first inspecting the instrument itself.

A power of attorney "to sell stock, to vote at an election, to collect rent, and to sell real estate," requires a one dollar and sixty cent stamp.

Your obedient servant,
GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Commissioner.

THE TAX ON CARRIAGES.

The carriage-makers, who are heavily taxed on all articles required in the manufacture of their goods, applied to Mr. BOUTWELL for information concerning the tax on the value of carriages, and received the following answer:

certainly decrease. It may be found in a few weeks, however, that the price of demand notes has had the effect of causing orders to be countermanded, and that the importations will consequently be smaller. The high price of demand notes has not affected our large importing houses unfavorably, after all. On the other hand it has been the means of adding to the profits of many of them. A good many of them in anticipation of the rise in the value of these notes, which was certain, as they daily became less abundant, procured very large quantities of them when they commanded a premium of but five or ten per cent., or less. They also invested largely in gold, which they reserved through all the fluctuations in its value, as compared with that of legal tender notes. These demand notes they have had at hand when duties were to be paid. But with the rise in the comparative value of gold, and in that of Custom-house demand notes, the price of every commodity has increased correspondingly. Those who have been compelled to buy demand notes with which to pay duties, giving therefor a premium of twenty or thirty per cent., have been, of course, compelled to add this sum to the selling price of their merchandise, thus raising its market value. In selling, those firms which paid but five per cent. for notes with which to pay duties, receive as much for their goods as those who paid twenty-five. In this way it is evident that the unsteady state of our currency and the high price of notes have acted favorably to the moneyed importing houses, and unfavorably to those of small means; giving to the former the power of underselling the latter, at the same time that they realize a very high profit. When the case is examined in this light, it is not so difficult to see how it has happened that, in spite of the war and the derangement of our currency, the importations have been and still are so great. That they will continue so as long as the condition of the money and merchandise market remains as at present, is not at all improbable, for many houses have sufficient notes with which to pay duties for a long time. Our exports, too, continue very heavy, and contribute largely toward the payment of our foreign debts.

A noticeable feature of the business at the Custom-house of this port during the present month, since gold and demand notes have been quoted at such high figures, has been the warehousing movement. A much larger proportion of the merchandise brought to the port has been placed in store than for some time past, and the receipts on withdrawals from warehouse exhibit a corresponding augmentation. They reached the sum of about $1,000,000 for the first twenty days of the month, against about $700,000 during the same portion of the preceding month. The total receipts for the month will not be much inferior to the heavy ones of August and September, as they reached a sum in the neighborhood of $3,250,000 on the 21st. From these figures it will be seen that the business of the Warehouse Department bears a greater proportion than usual to that of the whole Custom-house. The cause of this undoubtedly is to be found in the price of notes, importers only taking goods out of bond when they are sold, so as to derive any advantage which might arise from a depreciation of the price of demand notes.

Eighteenth Ward Republican Meeting.

ADDRESSES BY MESSRS. RICHARD WARREN, HON. F. A. CONKLING, MAJOR SCOFIELD, HON. CHAS. B. SEDGWICK AND OTHERS.

The "Wadsworth and Tremain Association," of the Eighteenth Ward, met Thursday evening at the Republican headquarters, near the corner of Broadway and Twenty-third-street, to ratify the recent State nominations of their Party—JAMES M. THOMPSON, Esq., the President of the Association, in the Chair. Mr. WM. DRUMMOND read a series of resolutions indorsing all the Republican nominees for the State and District, which were adopted nem. con. In the absence of some leading speakers announced by the call, RICHARD WARREN, Esq., addressed the audience in exalted commendation of Mr. ELLIOT C. COWDIN, their Congressional nominee, and good-humoredly satirized Mr. NELSON J. WATERBURY, his Democratic opponent. He was very bitter against the Southern aristocracy, blamed Slavery as the sole cause of the war, the Abolitionists who were accused of it, "never having cast a vote for any one," and denounced the Northern Democrats in unmeasured terms. The latter, he declared, would not have ventured one year ago, to put up a ticket like the present one headed by HORATIO SEYMOUR. But, times had changed, and they now felt bold and confident. Mr. WARREN had the assent and applause of his audience throughout.

Hon. FREDERICK A. CONKLING was received with great acclamation. He opened his address with a quotation from WILBERFORCE, denying the right of property in men, and discarding all respect for any compacts or treaties sustaining so nefarious a pretension. It was idle, said the spenker, to deny that all State issues are in this contest overshadowed by the national question, or that the Administration is now on trial before the 4,000,000 of the people of the Empire State. The elections in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania had gone against the Republicans, owing to the absence of their friends in the National armies, and statistics, gleaned from the Tribune, were read to support this theory. "Sinking or swimming," however, "under any conceivable circumstances," he (Mr. CONKLIN) stood by Mr. LINCOLN'S glorious Proclamation of Emancipation. [Great cheering.] He, then, strenuously defended the suspension of the habeas corpus, and only regretted that more of those who protested against it were not in Fort Lafayette. To a voice in the crowd he replied that he did not care what else was done with such, so that they were removed. [Tremendous applause.] The celebrated suspension of the habeas corpus at New-Orleans by Gen. JACKSON, while the British were investing the city, was recited in support of the present instance, and the most confident predictions of Mr. WADSWORTH'S success closed Mr. CONKLIN'S remarks.

Major SCOFIELD, of Oneida County, followed in a very vehement castigation of the entire position and character of the Northern Democracy. He rejoiced in the defeat of the "infernal villain" VALLANDIGHAM, of Ohio, and "the blacklegs, horse-thieves, traitors and hen-thieves" who had supported him, and now support those like him, including certain nominees in this City. After paying his left-handed respects to Ex-Presidents PIERCE and BUCHANAN, and promising 1,500 majority in Oneida against SEYMOUR, although deeply deploring the lukewarmness of some of the interior districts, Major SCOFIELD promised that the issue of the contest would place all who opposed it where the stars would be taken from them and the bars alone left to the minor, while the rope should catch the leading traitors! [Immense acclamation.] He closed by exhorting all Republicans to see, on election day, that their votes were deposited early, and pushed down to the bottom of the box by the knife of the Inspector.

The Hon. CHAS. B. SEDGWICK, of Syracuse, was the next speaker. In a long and elaborate address, he recapitulated the causes of the war, indorsed to the uttermost the President's recent proclamations, and denounced all timid counsels or Border State policy. Mr. SEDGWICK'S able and eloquent effort was applauded to the echo.

Mr. LOOMIS, from "Onondaga, the home of Mr. SEYMOUR," was last announced. That gentleman chiefly confined his remarks to the private character of the Democratic candidate, against which he admitted that but little could be said. His atrocious anti-war sentiments, however, were unsparingly reviewed until a late hour, when the meeting dispersed.

Committee on Railroads.

The Aldermanic Railroad Committee met yesterday afternoon without a quorum. The first paper taken up was the resolution directing inquiry to be made as to the number of cars run by the Sixth-avenue Company, the number they pay license for, and by what right they have extended their track into Fifty-ninth-street. The Clerk, Mr. E. W. TAYLOR, reported that the Company had paid license fees for 34 two-horse and 21 one-horse cars. The subject was then deferred till the next meeting, to give the officers of the Company notice to appear.

The matter of ordering an extension of the track of the Eighth-avenue Company to Eighty-second-street was then taken up. Mr. J. P. PAULESON appeared for the measure in behalf of the property-holders up town, who are interested in it. The charter of the Company, he stated, required them to extend their track as rapidly as the grade of the avenue should be completed, when ordered to do so by the Common Council. The present terminus of the road is at Fifty-ninth-street, but the Company voluntarily run cars to Seventy-second-street, in the day time, to accommodate the travel to Central Park and the new Reservoir. The grade of the avenue it is completed to Eighty-second-street, and beyond that is nearly completed to Eighty-fifth-street. The grading contractor would give permission to lay rails up to that point.

The Chairman, (Mr. BOOLE)—What objections do the company make to extending their track, and running cars as you desire?

Mr. PAULESON—They promised some time ago to extend their track, but the President says they have been unable to do so for want of iron. Their charter required them to complete the road within three years. The Council Board had passed the desired resolution, and he hoped the Board of Aldermen would concur.

Mr. BOOLE promised that the Committee would decide what they would do in the matter at the next full meeting.

The resolution in reference to the refusal of the railroad companies to change bank bills, and instructing the Committee to inquire into the matter, and report the necessary correction of the grievance, was then taken up.

Alderman SMITH—The resolution was referred to us last winter. The trouble it had reference to then is now over, as the stamps and postage currency have supplied the vacuum that then existed, in consequence of the withdrawal of silver from general use. Any way, it is not within the province of the Common Council to do anything in the matter.

Mr. BOOLE—I don't know about that. It seems to me that we have the power to compel the railroad companies to take such money as is in current use.

Mr. SMITH—They do. They make no objections now to the postage stamps.

The subject was laid over.

The resolution requiring a change of the T rail in Centre-street, of the Harlem Company, to the grooved rail, was next considered.

Mr. BOOLE—That seems to be proper. It has passed the Councilmen.

Mr. WALSH—The Company say they can't run their heavy cars on the grooved rail.

The resolution was laid over, and the one inquiring if any member of the Croton Board had given permission to the Seventh-avenue Railroad Company to take up the pavement in that thoroughfare for the purpose of putting down rails, was next considered.

Mr. WALSH—A resolution of inquiry of that Board would give us the desired information.

Mr. BOOLE—I had the resolution referred to this Committee in order to learn from the Ex-Commissioner, Mr. TAPPEN, about the matter, as well as from the acting members of the Croton Board. A resolution of inquiry would not apply to him, but we can request him to appear before us.

Mr. SMITH—It would be unnecessary. Mr. TAPPEN had nothing to do with it. I understood that the permission was given by only the President of the Croton Board, Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. BOOLE—Well, we want to know all about it. He can appear here at our next meeting.

The Committee then adjourned till Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Army and Navy Intelligence.

The War Department is at present making arrangements to carry out the project of filling up the decimated ranks of the regular army by recruits from volunteer organizations. It is estimated by an officer of the regular infantry, that the ten old regiments of that arm of the service, although allowed 1,000 men each, could not muster 6,000 rank and file.

Orders have been received at the Brooklyn Navy-yard to fit out the United States steamer Circassian as a transport and dispatch vessel, to take the place of the Massachusetts, which vessel has been for some months plying between New-York and the rendezvous of the blockading fleet. Arrangements are making to have the Circassian ready for the next outward trip. She is a recently purchased vessel.

The United States war-steamer Monitor, now at the Washington Navy-yard, is to be made ready for active duty before the 1st prox. She has had the greater part of her defects remedied, her armor having hardly needed any repair. The ordnance officers are improving her battery, which will be very formidable. The Locale of her next cruise is not known.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

A NEW-YORK MERCHANT ROBBED IN THE STREET.—For the last two weeks we have had accounts of highway robberies committed in this City, by a genteelly dressed colored man. His usual plan was to approach men passing through unfrequented streets, at a late hour of the night, suddenly draw a dagger, and threaten them with instant death unless they delivered to him all their money and valuables. Large amounts of money, and quite a number of watches have, in this manner, been obtained by him from his victims, who valued their money less than their lives. The last man who is known to have suffered from this footpad, is Mr. FERNANDO ESTRADO, a merchant, doing business at No. 483 Broadway. A few evenings since Mr. E. was met by this colored desperado, on the corner of Mott and Broome streets. With a terrifying threat, and a flourish of his steel, he demanded Mr. E.'s money and watch, and in default of which he said he would take his life. Mr. ESTRADO having no money with him, gave the robber his gold watch and chain, with which the latter at once made his escape. The victim applied at Police Headquarters, where he gave a description of the villain's person to Sergeant YOUNG, and by this means Detective FARLEY was yesterday enabled to effect his arrest. The prisoner, upon being taken to the Station-house, gave his name as ANTONIO ISMAGO BARTOL. Upon being confronted by Mr. ESTRADO, he was instantly identified as the man who robbed him. The accused says he was born in Cuba, has been 18 months in this country, but only about six weeks in this City. He says he is a waiter by occupation, and resides at No. 100 Hester-street. He was committed by Justice CONNOLLY for trial. Persons who have lately been robbed in the manner above described, are requested to call at Police Headquarters and take a look at the prisoner.

MR. CONWAY AND THE SECOND HAWKINS ZOUAVES.—After eighteen months active labors as Chaplain of HAWKINS' Zouaves, Rev. Mr. CONWAY came to this City with high recommendations to Gov. MORGAN. He contemplated the organization of a Second Hawkins Zouaves, but as the Governor had decided to raise no new regiments, he was unable to carry out his favorite project. He has been offered the Chaplaincy of the Ironsides, and has now identified himself with that fine regiment, to which he invites all who designed entering the Second Hawkins Zouaves. Mr. CONWAY will raise a company himself, and in other ways give the Ironsides the full benefit of his energy and experience. He can be found at the headquarters, Broadway, near Twelfth-street.

A BURGLARY IN TENTH-STREET.—JAMES DAKEN was arrested, at an early hour yesterday morning, by Officers LONG and HITCHCOCK, as he was in the act of leaving the house of JOHN KLOPT, No. 331 Tenth-street, where he had forced his way into a bedroom, and stolen therefrom a pair of pantaloons, in one of the pockets of which was $25 in money. All of the stolen property was found upon his person. Justice OSBORNE committed the accused for examination.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—The Board of Police desire to acknowledge, with thanks, the sum of $5, received from "Cash," to aid families of recruits in Metropolitan Regiments.

APPOINTMENT OF DRAFT COMMISSIONERS.—Gen. ANTHON yesterday appointed Alderman TERENCE FARLEY Draft Commissioner for the Thirteenth Ward, vice Judge DALY, resigned. The Judge could not be spared from his Court to attend to the duties.

NEW-JERSEY.

CERTIFICATES OF VALUE.—The Common Council of Jersey City, at their meeting on Tuesday night adopted an ordinance for the issuing of certificates of value of the denominations of 5, 10, 25 and 50 cents, to the amount of $25,000. These certificates are to be deposited with the City Treasurer, and will be paid out to persons holding city warrants, and are redeemable in one year. They will be ready for use in about three weeks.

A MYSTERIOUS CASE.—An unknown man, supposed to be a soldier, was found lying insensible in Palisade-avenue, Hudson City, on Sunday. All possible care was bestowed upon him, notwithstanding which he remained unconscious until Monday night, when he died. There were bruises upon his face and hands, which might have been caused by accident or by violence. The body having been buried without an inquest, Coroner DONNELLY will have it exhumed for the purpose of holding an investigation.

A TRAIN OF CARS OFF THE TRACK.—The 10 o'clock, A. M., train of cars, from Jersey City, yesterday, ran off the track at the Newark-avenue crossing in Jersey City, in consequence of the displacement of the switch. No one was injured, and the locomotive was only slightly damaged.

The Motion for a Perpetual Injunction against the Seventh-avenue and Broadway Railroad.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Ingraham.

The Mayor, &c., of New-York vs. John Kerr et al.—The argument on the motion for a perpetual injunction in this case, before mentioned in the TIMES, was proceeded with yesterday. The Corporation Counsel on behalf of the City commenced an action against the defendants to recover $100,000 damages for injuries sustained by the City by reason of the unlawful occupation of the streets by the defendants in building what is known as the Seventh-avenue Railroad. The plaintiffs claim and declare that they have from time immemorial possessed and enjoyed, and under their charter have and own the exclusive right and property of controlling and licensing all those who use the said streets for carrying thereupon persons and property for hire. The plaintiffs further show that they have at great expense paved and regulated said streets and made them convenient for travel, and that in violation of these rights, the defendants have broke and entered on the Seventh-avenue and Broadway for the purpose of building a railroad.

As a defence, and in opposition to the motion, the defendants set forth the act of the Legislature passed April 17, 1860, authorizing them to construct such a railroad. That the plaintiffs possess no other title or interest in the streets of the City than that conferred on them by the act entitled "An act to reduce several laws relating particularly to the City of New-York, into one act," passed April 9, 1813, and the acts amendatory thereof; and that plaintiffs have no private right or property in, or control over, said streets, which is not subject to the control or disposition of the Legislature.

The question of legislative authority was argued at great length, the Counsel for the Corporation insisting that in all the adjudicated cases the paramount rights of the Corporation had been recognized and upheld. All the other City railroads had been constructed by the authority of the Corporation, and the Corporation claimed the right, under their Charter, to grant or refuse the authority to construct the Seventh-avenue and Broadway Railroad. The Corporation have a fee in the streets of the City. The defendants' counsel present the following points. First, It is impossible to maintain that the Municipal Legislature is an imperium in imperis, possessed of political or governmental powers which are in any respect exempt from the control of the State Legislature. The Corporation, as such, has no interest in its police or governmental powers. It is merely a delegate quo ad hoc of the Legislature for local purposes, subject to the control and direction of the Legislature. (13 Wend., 330; 25 Id., 682; 4 Hill, 393; 4 Ham., (O.,) 432; 3 How. U. S., 551.)

Second—The fee of the streets now vested in the Corporation was acquired by it under acts of the Legislature as the trustee or agent of the supreme governmental power in that behalf. Nor was it vested for purposes purely local but for the general use of the people of the whole State as highway. (2 R. S. 1813, pp. 414, 415; Ch. Kent's note, No. 31.) The very acts under which the title was acquired shows the Legislature reserved to itself the power of regulating the use of these streets. (2 R. S. 1813, p. 424.)

Third—The notion that the Corporation has a private indefeasible estate in the fees for licences to such carriers over the streets as these railroad grantees, is wholly without foundation. 1.—The railroad in question is merely for the transportation of passengers. (Laws 1860, p. 1042, sec. 1.) II.—The charters existing prior to the Revolution did indeed grant to the City Corporation "the office of cartage, carriage and portage of all goods, wares and merchandise, and all other things to be carted or carried in and through said City or any part thereof, (Montgomery Charter, sec. 19,) and it has never been supposed that this was an irrevocable grant of property. Chancellor Kent, Note No. 34, section 24, refers to the mode of appointment of officers to execute the same offices mentioned in section 19; it is merely a regulation supplemental to section 19, and necessary to carry it into effect. But the office of hackney coachman or stage driver or carrier of persons was not granted to the City Corporation. Nothing of the kind is to be found in the ancient charters. 3.—All power or authority of the Corporation in respect to the carriage of persons for hire was granted by acts of the State Legislature which of course are appealed at the pleasure of grantor (2 R. S., 1813, p., 13 and Laws of 1846, p. 408, sec. 10; Laws 1824, p. 40, chap. 50.)

The Court reserved decision.

Greene C. Bronson and H. H. Anderson, for the motion. Charles O'Connor and H. W. Robinson, opposed.

Sale of Government Vessels—Testimony of Secretary Welles.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Before Justice White.

Thomas B. Stillman vs. Samuel L. Mitchill.—The trial of this case was continued yesterday. Ex-Judge Dean, for the defendant, put in the depositions of Secretary Welles and others. Mr. Welles states that he recollected Mr. Stillman, who came to Washington as a candidate for the office of Civil Engineer in the Navy-yard, Brooklyn, but did not recollect whether Stillman spoke to him on the subject of his appointment. He had no recollection of a negotiation with Mr. Stillman in relation to the purchase of the vessels in question. The purchase was made through George D. Morgan, of the New-York and Savannah Steam Navigation Company. The bill of sale being executed by the defendant, the President of the Company.

On cross-examination, Mr. Welles stated that the payment for the vessels was made through Mr. Henderson, the Navy Agent at New-York, and the reason he limited the purchase to one person in this City, was that he did not want more than one brokerage to be paid, and to limit that to 2½ per cent.

Mr. Fox, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, deposed that he was not aware that the plaintiff ever presented either of the vessels to the Department for sale.

The case is still pending.

Action for Slander—Disagreement of Jury.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Before Justice Bosworth.

William A. Marr vs. William H. Mitchell.—This was an action for slander, consisting in the words—alleged to have been used by defendant—that "William A. Marr has forged my name to a check, and obtained $50 upon it."

The case was mentioned in the TIMES of Tuesday. The trial was concluded yesterday, and the jury were out several hours without succeeding on an agreement in the verdict. They finally returned to Court, and on declaring that it was impossible for them to agree on a verdict, the Court discharged them.

Chauncey Shaffer, for plaintiff; W. W. Niles, for defendant.

Decisions.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Peckham.

The East River Bank vs. Ackerson et al.—Default set aside on payment of $40 costs.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 22—P. M.

The Stock Exchange Board this forenoon washed their hands of all responsibility or participation in the present mischievous gambling operation in American Gold coin. They resolved, on the recommendation of their Select Committee of yesterday, by a vote of two to one, or say 67 to 33, to strike Gold and United States Notes receivable for customs, (and therein equivalent to Gold,) from their official dealings, on and after Monday next, 27th inst. This result is far more creditable to the patriotic sentiment of the Board than was anticipated yesterday afternoon. The majority is understood to have been materially increased by the appeal of the President of the Board, Mr. A. B. BAYLISS, at the close of the debate to-day, to stand by the credit and integrity of the Government, and to acquit the Stock Exchange of the great City of New-York of all participation in the operation, now going forward, to depreciate the Bank and National Currency of the country.

After the vote of the Board was announced, an undue and singular turn took place in the price of Gold, which had previously gone up, first to 133½ at the Board, and then to 134 ₱ cent. on the Street. The pressure to sell carried down the rate at one moment to 129 ₱ cent.—a fall of five per cent. on the action of the Stock Exchange Board in less than half an hour. But from this decline the dealings soon rallied to 130¼@131@132 ₱ cent.

The public spirited members of the Stock Exchange who voted to-day against their own interest as the recipients of commissions on the purchase and sale of Gold at the Board, now look with reasonable confidence to the Associated Banks of this City, to act upon their example, if they have not already done so. We hope this confidence is not misplaced. The action of the Stock Exchange reflects in a striking degree the popular sentiment. If after its emphatic expression any considerable number of Banks on the Street or up town are disposed to persevere in lending their means and machinery to encourage their scandalous speculation in Gold now indulged in, simply because it is countenanced at Bank, we have only to say that such Banks deserve to be held up by name to the public execration.

We meet with numerous opinions on the Street to the effect that the action of the Stock Exchange will not arrest the rise in Gold. Perhaps it will not. The main object, however, is certainly accomplished, of relieving a public and eminently public spirited, as well as National Association, like the New-York Board, of all participation in such an uncalled-for and demoralizing speculation.

The rates of Exchange on London closed for the Persia's mail to-day quite unsettled, because of the fluctuations of Gold at the Stock Board. The figures rose from 143 to 146½ ₱ cent., and closed 146@146½ ₱ cent. After the steamer sailed there was nothing done in Bills.

The market for Money is firm at 4@5 ₱ cent. to the Stock Brokers. There is a good supply on the Street and at Bank, but less disposition to accept the cheaper rate of 4 ₱ cent.

On the Stock Exchange, the vigorous upward movement in both classes of Erie Shares continues, and the additional rise, to-day, is 1@1½ ₱ cent. The sales were, altogether, 12,000, as against 15,000 shares yesterday, comprising, by far, the most important share of the dealings of the day on the Railway list. At the same time the stiffness in this speculation imparted a better feeling to the Western Roads, the quotations of which nearly all close higher than yesterday afternoon by ¼@1 ₱ cent. The Federal and Border State Stocks are again tame, and rather neglected.

Late in the afternoon the prices of the Second Board were generally well supported, and the market left off firm, at about the following figures, compared with Tuesday afternoon:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Our special correspondent at Harper's Ferry sends us the particulars of the reconnoissance toward Leesburgh, from the Army of the Potomac, which started on Tuesday, and returned yesterday. Our forces were under the command of that dashing officer Gen. GEARY. The expedition, which embraced cavalry, artillery and infantry, proceeded as far as Lovettsville, encountering on the way a party of rebel cavalry, which was effectually broken up—several of them being killed and wounded, and a large number, including the commander, taken prisoners. We had but one man killed, and three or four wounded.

The campaign in Kentucky has apparently been a failure on both sides—the rebels failing to capture Cincinnati and Louisville, and Gen. BUELL failing to capture the rebels. Our latest reports from Cincinnati and other points in the West indicate that BRAGG and KIRBY SMITH have both succeeded in escaping through the mountains into East Tennessee, with their ammunition and subsistence trains, and their immense spoils captured from the loyal people of Kentucky. It is believed that BRAGG will now make direct for Nashville, and we shall probably have a portion of BUELL'S army counter-marching in that direction to head him off. At all events, the rebels, except the guerrillas under MORGAN, and a few detached squads prowling about in various localities, are out of Kentucky, and it is too late in the season to anticipate another invasion of any dimensions. The pursuit of BRAGG appears to have terminated at Mount Vernon, in Rock Castle County, seventy-five miles southeast of Frankfort.

The Louisville Journal learns from a well-informed army officer, who arrived from Danville on Friday, that Gen. GILBERT'S army corps was within seven miles of the Kentucky River on Wednesday, and moved at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that day in pursuit of the rebel army. The rebels in their flight had destroyed 900 of their wagons, together with the bridge over the Kentucky River, to embarrass the pursuit by Gen. GILBERT'S forces. The retreating rebel force embraced 4,000 infantry, 400 cavalry, and a battery of artillery, wherewith to dispute the passage of the Federal troops. In confirmation of the above report paroled prisoners from the Twenty-fourth Wisconsin Regiment, of Gen. SHERIDAN'S Division, who arrived here yesterday, state that the rebels have retreated with the intention of escaping through Cumberland Slip.

The Louisville Journal, of Saturday, says: "We have had reports as to the capture of a large number of rebel soldiers at Harrodsburgh, Ky., on the 10th inst. We learned, yesterday, that the capture was made by Lieut.-Col. JOHN BOYLE, of the Ninth Kentucky Cavalry, who made a dash into the place, completely surprising and taking prisoners sixteen hundred rebels, composed of artillery, infantry and cavalry. A portion of those captured were sick and wounded soldiers, and the remainder were the rear guard of Gen. BRAGG'S army. Lieut.-Col. BOYLE'S gallantry on the occasion is highly commended, both officers and men exhibiting the coolness and courage of veterans."

Judging by the following paragraph from the Memphis Bulletin, of the 14th, the rebel army of the Southwest was not entirely demolished at Corinth and the Hatchie, nor in the subsequent pursuit: "We learn from the South, that VAN DORN'S army was all day, last Saturday, passing through Holly Springs. It is said they are encamped at Dampkin's Mill, about six miles from Holly Springs. They were too fleet for the Union army, and made good their escape to safe quarters. It is said that the forces in pursuit are slowly returning. They pursued them to Ripley."

Several gentlemen reached Gallipolis, Ohio, recently, having left Charleston, in the Kanawha Valley, on the 17th, among them Mr. NEWTON, editor of the Kanawha Republican. They report that the rebels, under Gen. LORING, have all left the Valley, and none are now on the west side of Gauley. It was reported that Gen. LORING had received orders from Gen. LEE to report, with his entire command, to him, at Winchester, Va. It was also reported and believed by the Secessionists, that Gen. LEE was concentrating every available man at Winchester for the purpose of overpowering and crushing Gen. MCCLELLAN; when, if successful, he is to invade Ohio and Pennsylvania. The rebel raid into the Kanawha Valley has been fully as successful as anticipated. It is estimated by these gentlemen that the rebels have carried off fully two hundred thousand bushels of salt.

There was considerable excitement in Cumberland, Md., on Sunday afternoon. A report reached the city that the rebels had possession of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at some point between Green Spring and Hancock. Five companies of infantry and a couple of pieces of artillery were sent down the road, but nothing had been heard from the expedition when the train left. It was generally believed that the rebels were in large force at Bloomery Gap.

A letter dated at Nashville, Oct. 12, mentions a rumor that a large portion of BRECKINRIDGE'S command had arrived at Lavergne. There are at least some Mississippi and Georgia troops there, as our forces have captured soldiers on picket duty belonging to those States.

In answer to a large number of propositions made to the Navy Department for the capture of the pirate Alabama, or "290," Secretary WELLES has offered, in case of her capture, to pay for her half a million of dollars; and in case she is destroyed, to pay three hundred thousand dollars—the latter, however, to be subject to an appropriation by Congress.

A gentleman who left our fleet at the mouth of the James River on Saturday, states that the Galena, Capt. RODGERS, and other strong boats there, are waiting the appearance of the new rebel iron-clad prow Richmond, and are confident of giving a good account of her if she shall be bold enough to hazard a trial of strength.

The iron steamers Merrimac and Mississippi are taking in large quantities of stores in Boston preparatory to sailing for some unknown destination, undoubtedly the Gulf. The Forty-fourth Regiment N. E. Guards, and the Third and Fifth Regiments of Massachusetts are under orders to sail in these vessels.

The prize schooner Revere, (British, of Yarmouth, N. S.,) Acting Master L. A. BROWN, from Cape Fear in six days, arrived last night. The Revere was captured on the 11th inst., off Cape Fear, by the United States gunboats Maratanza and Monticello. Her cargo consists of salt, trappings, haversacks, etc.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Seymourites had another "tall" demonstration at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, yesterday evening. The concourse inside and outside of the building was large and vociferous and quite revived the stirring recollections of old-fashioned campaigns. Within, the speakers were Hon. HORATIO SEYMOUR, JOHN VAN BUREN and Hon. DAVID R. FLOYD JONES; SAMUEL SLOAN, Esq., presiding, assisted by a host of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries. Outside, Messrs. Moses F. Odell, Judge S. D. Morris, Edmund Driggs, E. O. Perrin, Ex-Alderman Wilson, J. L. Douglass, and others, all of whom indulged in the usual Anti-Republican strain, but more mildly than heretofore.

Commissioner BOUTWELL has decided that Alcohol manufactured from whisky distilled prior to Sept. 1, and on which a tax has not been paid, will be subject to a duty of three per cent. ad valorem. Also, that under the provisions of the excise law, an apothecary who sells ardent spirits by retail must have a retail liquor dealer's license. If, however, he only uses it in the compounding of medicines, it is not necessary that he should take a license as a retail liquor dealer.

The schooner Admiral Blake, reported to have been captured by the privateer Alabama, has arrived at Sippican. She had not seen the Alabama. Capt. D. R. GIFFORD, late of the bark Elisha Dunbar, reports that he was told by some of the crew of the Alabama that the Ocean Rover, of Mattapoisett, had 900 barrels of sperm and 200 barrels whale oil on board at the time of her capture. They scuttled her at first, but as she would not sink, they then set her on fire. She was so low in the water that nothing below the upper deck was burned, and a Portuguese wrecking brig coming alongside, Capt. SEMMES allowed the islanders to take whatever they could get, and about 500 barrels of the oil was rescued by them. Capt. GIFFORD is firmly of the opinion that the Alabama and "290" are not the same vessel, as he frequently heard the crew of the Alabama speaking of the "290" and of the Oreto. Some of the newspapers taken from the Emily Farnham contained an account of the "290" running the blockade into Mobile, and on hearing it read the crew of the Alabama gave three cheers for the "290."

The War Department, it is announced, has decided to allow drafted men a period of twenty days in which to procure substitutes.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, of Indiana, is re-elected to Congress by a majority of 228.

JOHN LINN, of Sussex, was nominated on Tuesday at Morristown, as a Union candidate for Congress from the Fourth District of New-Jersey. He is a lawyer of ability and character, and has hitherto acted with the Republicans. GEORGE T. CORE would have received the nomination had he not positively declined to accept it.

Apples are so plenty in Western New-York that they can be bought for fifty cents a barrel! Potatoes show no symptoms of disease, and the best ones are sold for a dollar a barrel, including package. One farmer has an orchard of choice grafted fruit, and offered the whole of his crop of apples at twelve and a half cents per bushel, the purchaser to gather the fruit and select only such as he wanted and could sell.

The testimony in the case of the People vs. JOHN REYNOLDS, charged with killing PAT MATTHEWS, was concluded in the Court of Sessions yesterday, and, pending the summing up by counsel, the Court adjourned to 11 o'clock this morning, when the case will be given to the jury.

The Stock Market was firmer yesterday, with higher prices in the Railway Shares, especially Erie. Gold fluctuated widely, first advancing to 134, then suddenly receding to 129, and up again to 132@131½, as against 132⅝@½ on Tuesday afternoon. The Stock Exchange Board have resolved to have nothing to do with the speculation in Gold on and after Monday next.

Breadstuffs were much brisker and dearer, yesterday, as were also Cotton, Pork, Lard, Butter, Cheese and Whisky. A fair business was transacted in Sugars, Hay, Hops, Metals, Oils, Tallow and Wool, at buoyant rates. The movements in other articles were restricted. The freight engagements were more extensive.

THE CONTEST IN NEW-JERSEY.—The friends of the Administration are working with stirring energy in New-Jersey. The disadvantages they have to contend with are formidable. The State has a strong secession leaven, the product of ignorance on the one hand, and of a mistaken notion of self-interest on the other; and the net result is an open and shameless sympathy with rebellion, not at all below the mark of VALLANDIGHAM and the WOODS. In the northwestern counties the Breckinridge Democrats are still faithful to the South. At the east, the long connection of the leading manufacturing capitalists with the Southern trade, and their severe losses in consequence of the war, have not endeared the cause of the Union to their hearts; and very gladly would they make any concession to procure peace and the restoration of their business. These causes create a numerical strength as a basis of the Democratic Party, which is, as elsewhere, augmented by Democrats who are loyal to the Union and the Constitution, and mistakenly believe that they are giving a new impulse to the war by voting for Democratic candidates. Add to these influences the absence of a preponderating vote in the shape of the volunteers in the army,—for her volunteer soldiers are true to the Union and to the only Administration which can redeem it,—and we have some measure of the force the Secession Democracy are in a condition to exert in the contest.

On the other hand, the loyalty of New-Jersey is of the highest and purest type. Prompt in responding to every call of the Government; earliest in the field with men, and earnest in urging the most vigorous prosecution of the war; liberal in support and frank in counsel, the upholders of the Administration have nobly and manfully done their duty. The Republicans stand unwaveringly by the Government; and in addition to the intelligent war Democrats, who see that to vote against LINCOLN now is to vote for DAVIS, the whole body of old DOUGLAS Democrats are understood to be decided for the Union Republican nominations. If these interests be brought fully and fairly into the field, the State can be saved; the people spared the disgrace of such representatives in Congress as PERRY and STEELE; and the character of the New-Jersey delegation in Congress be placed where it was when Gov. PENNINGTON stood at its head. We rejoice in the belief that the approaching election will yield this triumphant result.

SEYMOUR'S BROOKLYN SPEECH LAST NIGHT.—Mr. SEYMOUR is laboring very hard for his election as Governor of the Empire State. He delivered another speech last night in Brooklyn; and there was a large crowd present to listen to him. On this occasion, the Ex-Governor seems to have rather changed his tactics, and made an effort to plant himself on the platform occupied by the successful Democracy of the Western States. He avoided, in great measure, the semi-secession utterances which characterized his Cooper Institute speech. He has discovered that this great and loyal State will not sustain him in making war upon the Administration while it is engaged in fighting for its life and the life of the nation. But his real sentiments came out very legibly in some of his remarks, and more especially in the spirit in which they were uttered. It was quite evident that he is as much an enemy of the Administration, and as bitterly opposed to its policy of using "all means to crush" the rebellion as he was ten days ago. His buncombe phrases and hollow rhetoric will deceive no honest and determinedly-loyal voter.

Mr. SEYMOUR'S man Friday was, of course, on hand, and painfully delivered himself once again of his pet theories. Mr. VAN BUREN is still in favor of capturing Richmond, and then—"Wayward sisters," &c. He is greatly offended at certain attacks on his "moral character," but did not scruple to bring against Gen. WADSWORTH charges which he must have known were false. He furnished no light regarding the means by which he got hold of Gen. SCOTT'S letter to Mr. SEWARD, although he was not ashamed to drag in as his accomplice a "most highly accomplished and beautiful lady." Altogether, the speech of Prince JOHN was quite equal in flippancy, malignity and lack of patriotism to anything he has yet uttered.

The Northern Traitors

An eloquent historian and statesman, in his reply to the loyal citizens of the Eighth District of this city, requesting his consent to a nomination to Congress, wrote the following memorable words.

"I will not give a vote for any man whose election would be an encouragement to the Rebellion to hold out. I, for one, will not consent to send our sons and brothers to the battle-field and then betray them at the polls."

These pointed words of an old Democratic leader should be at the head of every election notice and advertisement in this campaign. They convey the whole issue between the Union party and the SEYMOUR party. One upholds the Government; the other attacks it. One supports the army, and offers up its sons and brothers for the country's sake; the other would betray them to the enemy; one supports the financial credit of the country; the other weakens it. While a barbarous rebellion is desolating ten thousand homes; while treason is writing her terrible records in tears and blood over a continent; while our friends are murdered treacherously by guerrillas, and fire and havoc sweep over peaceful loyal districts; these men, calling themselves "loyal citizens," have the audacity to rise up and excuse these enormities and plead the wrongs of the rebels, and urge the giving up of all for which we have struggled. While our brave fellows—our kinsmen and friends—are writhing in hospitals or exposed to bullet and shell, or giving up property and lives for the cause of the Union, these pitiful demagogues would weaken them by attacking the National cause in the rear.

Fancy any such party appearing in a Southern State urging Northern wrongs. How long would it be before their leaders would swing high for such treason? If our foreign enemies have ever believed in the accusations they scattered of the repressal of liberty of speech and Press in the Northern States, they must certainly retract them now.

These democratic leaders of the WOOD and SEYMOUR stamp are more truly false to patriotism and the country, and more dangerous now than any rebel leader. They attack the Republic in the dark; they assassinate the Union; we know not where to find them. The rebels are open and undisguised enemies; we can understand their assaults.

Suppose for an instant that the Van Buren submission policy was carried out, and that the North ingloriously retired from the contest, what would be the result?

We have spent perhaps 200,000 lives and $700,000,000; we have lost and desolated property to a countless value; our households have been stripped of their best and noblest young men, whose bodies fatten Southern soil, and now, on the Potomac as our boundary, without the possession of Kentucky or Tennessee, this Democratic policy would urge us to stop, basely lower the Union flag to the rebellion, abandon our thousands of Union friends at the South, give up New-Orleans, and the Mississippi, and "let the wayward sisters go!" The absurdity, the supreme folly or insanity of such a policy, is the only thing which should save its advocates from being punished as traitors. Every man who has loaned to the Government, or who owns its paper, is urged to strike off fifty per cent. of its value; every woman who has lost lover or husband; every father who mourns his son; every man whose brother or friend lies now in a bloody grave, is asked to confess that he has died in vain. All who have hoped for a glorious Republic in the future, covering the continent with institutions of liberty; all who have struggled and prayed for the triumph of freedom and justice in this hemisphere, are now told to forget their aspirations and prayers and accept the new Democratic platform—submission to treason and Slavery. That a party should dare in this hour of the country's agony and shame, to arise and propose such dishonor, shows how far political corruption and debasement had gone among our public men. These old party hacks, these caucus tricksters, these Democrats of the olden time, who lived in subserviency to slave-masters, forget that a new age has appeared—an era of courage and manliness and patriotism—and so they venture to stand up again and air their baseness and cowardice before, what they suppose, a credulous and indifferent audience. But times have changed, as they will soon bitterly learn.

JOHN VAN BUREN IN 1848.—A correspondent inquires of us whether the JOHN VAN BUREN who once upon a time used the following language in a speech at Cleveland, is the identical individual who is now electioneering for SEYMOUR, and is so bitterly opposed to the Emancipation Proclamation; and if it is, whether his long-continued illness may not lately have obfuscated his brain?

"I am the unmitigated enemy of Slavery, and would have it abolished without delay. I say, therefore, for myself—and I wish to be understood as speaking for myself alone—that, let what will come, I shall, under no necessity whatever, support a man who does not believe Slavery to be an unmixed curse

The Liberated Slaves.

No one believes that Slavery can exist in the Border States after it shall have been abolished in the South. However earnest the desire of the National Government to preserve to the loyalists in those States the rights which they have never forfeited—and among these the right to hold slaves—it will be found impossible, in the nature of things, to do so, in regard to this particular class of property. Slavery and freedom cannot exist in such contiguity. Long since, it became apparent that no slave could be held in any county bordering on a Free State, provided the slave had spirit enough to aspire to be a freeman. Hence, Slavery has not practically existed for years in all that belt of country comprising the northern parts of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and Kentucky. Now, surround those States with free territory, in which thereafter no Fugitive Slave law can be enforced, and what will be the result? With the moral excitation on the subject that the war has brought, added to the causes that have thinned the slaves heretofore from the Northern border, it is clear that the institution must die—as quickly and surely as a man dies who is set a-bleeding at every pore.

Universal emancipation is to be the end. And if for no other reason, simply because partial emancipation is impossible. Human passion is like gunpowder. It is contagious in explosion. Popular excitement is epidemic. It is not possible to set bounds to it, or confine it to classes. When three millions of long-suffering slaves spring to freedom, and raise the glad shout that will make heaven with echoes ring, does any one suppose that one million of their kindred, fellows in suffering and in aspiration, dwelling in actual contact with them, and every fibre of their frames in unison with the gigantic moral resurrection, can stand unmoved by the spectacle? We already know that in Maryland, the slaves, though not included in the terms of the Proclamation, are anticipating and appropriating its promises, even ahead of those in the further South, against whose bonds the blow is aimed. "When January comes we shall be free." This is the language of the slaves in Maryland; and in all the States. Can the hope be extinguished, or the word recalled upon which it lives? Never! The sweep of an edict that gathers its power from the fierce passions and hot prayers of a million hearts, will be like the sweep of a planet in its orbit. "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?"

The spark has been applied to the magazine, and not all the water of ocean can extinguish it, nor all the weight of the globe repress it. What comes of the explosion? Thirty-four Free States, and four millions of freed persons of African descent.

What is to be done with these people? They are the Nation's foundlings. Freedom violated by Tyranny has been brought to birth in the fullness of time, and in great pain has been delivered of four millions of hapless children. These are laid at our door. They are the Nation's foundlings, and we must care for them or they will perish. See, what is their condition! They are naked, hungry and helpless. They have no property—not so much as a rood of land wherein to be buried. They have no food—not so much as to keep soul and body together for a week. They have no clothes—not so much as to cover their nakedness once; and any change is—to nudity! They have no friends—for who can afford to be a friend to slaves when common calamities are upon the country, compelling every soul to take care of his own; and even that burden is not light. They have no family sympathies and support. These would go far to make abject poverty tolerable; for natural feeling would insure attention in extreme cases of suffering. But all ties of family have been lightly regarded in the midst of Slavery, and its circles are few and narrow. Every enfranchised slave is thus seen to be a pauper—landless, friendless, homeless, naked and hungry. They have no education, for the law forbade them to taste of the fruits of the tree of knowledge. They have no habits of thrift and providence, for their labor was ever enforced and reluctant, and the care for their animal wants, even, was always assumed by others. What shall be done with these hungry and helpless millions?

"Give me ships and money," says Senator POMEROY, "and I will search foreign lands until I find a home for a few hundred!" Is this solemn mockery of a nation struggling under an instant burden to be tolerated? We must put away this trifling, or we shall have a starving race of helots on our hands. Half the enfranchised slaves might perish before POMEROY could find a "tropical" conservatory for his exotics.

and who will not, by virtue of his office, use all constitutional power to abolish it."

To our correspondent's queries we reply: "We should think likely."

English Cotton Famine Ended.

While the United States are happily emancipated from the political dogma that "Cotton is King"—by virtue of which the Cotton States were wont to practice much arrogance toward the rest of the Union—it must not be understood that the people of the North do not consider cotton an element of vast importance in their future political and commercial relations. We wish to destroy the infatuated belief of the Gulf States that in them only, of all lands of the world, cotton can be profitably produced. But we do not wish to lose cotton from the list of American products. From that source has been drawn many millions of the wealth that, in its suddenness and vastness, has made the United States a marvel of material prosperity. It has furnished the bulk of foreign exchange to us for over a quarter of a century. It has freighted American bottoms—set running millions of American spindles—clothed and fed millions of American laborers, and shall we dash away the agent of so much prosperity, merely because, in the downfall of slave cotton culture in America, the rebel States get an annihilating blow?

We are sorry to have to sound a note of alarm on this subject, and to say that Great Britain is, too rapidly for our welfare, becoming independent of the American supply of cotton. The loud lamentation in the manufacturing districts, and the noisy concern of the British public on the subject has been deceiving us. The distress among operatives no doubt exists, but the rise in the price of cotton owned in England at the beginning of the war, and the advance of the value of cotton manufactures, amount in the aggregate to many millions of dollars more than the profit England would have made by running her mills on full time. England can, therefore, well afford to relieve the distress of her idle hands, for her increase of wealth will be great, in spite of it all. But the ostentatious anxiety of British legislators and economists about the cotton supply, was much of it insincere, and exaggerated to some extent, we apprehend, with the not very worthy motive of destroying the sympathy of British working men with the United States, whose insane war, it was held, brought such ruin on their industry.

We are now startled by the extraordinary declaration from England that the worst days of the cotton famine are past, and that henceforth, independently of the American supply, the English spinners will find employment. We publish in the TIMES to-day an extract from the London News of Oct. 6, in which this important fact is set forth and fully explained. And we take this occasion, in view of the vital interest of the people of the United States in the subject, to urge our Government to the most vigorous measures for the encouragement of cotton culture on lands under the National control. Texas, Florida and Arkansas are magnificent fields for cotton-growing, and they might all be made available for this purpose. We are soon to have thousands of enfranchised Africans on our hands, skilled in cotton cultivation, and literally perishing for lack of homes and honest employment. All their energies should be directed on American soil, to save to the nation the vast advantage it has always held, by reason of the vastness and value of its cotton product. Will the Administration look to its duty in the premises?

A London Sunday "Shindy."

English journals have predicted the reign of license and disorder in this country as the result of our civil war. The mob was to rule, and civil authority must give way to anarchy or despotism. The character of the people and the nature of our Government seem to be alike an enigma to our British cousins. Here are massed nearly a million of people in this single City. We have passed through a year and a half of war. Hundreds of thousands of troops have been enlisted or temporarily quartered here. The intensest excitement has prevailed. Political agitation has been unrestrained. Yet there has not been a riot or a serious disturbance of the public peace. Our cities have been more quiet and orderly, for the most part, than during any similar period before the war. The records of crime show a steady diminution of arrests. Property and life were never more secure. Law was never more respected. So much for New-York.

How fares London? Why, there were more broken heads in the Sunday shindy in Hyde Park—of which a graphic description was given in yesterday's TIMES, from the latest English journals—than in all the popular outbreaks here since the Astor-place riot, some dozen years ago. A quarrel about GARIBALDI, between "Irish roughs" and the native and foreign sympathizers with progressive Italy, brought 200,000 people to blows, or to be spectators of the fight. "At least 2,000 people were battling in different parts of the park; in some cases knives were used, and several persons were taken off the ground who had been stabbed. About 500 soldiers were mixed up in the crowd, great numbers of whom were fighting against the Irishmen," etc. "The approach of dusk"—the shindy began early in the afternoon—and of the police, put a stop to the proceedings, "the various surgeries in the neighborhood being crowded with parties waiting to have their wounds dressed."

This is a particularly edifying record of Sunday exercises in the central spot of Christian civilization. Had it occurred in Central Park instead of Hyde Park, would it not have been cited as a melancholy proof of the decadence of public morals incident to Republican institutions, and as a new motive to intervene "in the interest of humanity and civilization"—and cotton? Would not the inefficiency of our Police authorities have been the butt of the Times and Post, had a riot raged from early afternoon till dusk before their appearance in the field? Had our Sunday been thus scandalized, should we ever have heard the last of our shameless disregard for sacred hours?

We are not accustomed to resort to the tu quoque style of argumentation; but the persistent vilifications of this country and its institutions, and the incessant auguries of evil for us in the British Press, constrain comment on occurrences like the one under review. Groundless "curses" "roost" on the trees of Hyde Park. There, gigantic shindies have come to be the order—or rather the disorder—of the day. The metropolis whose Presses have not ceased to prate of "mob rule" in America, finds its great pleasure-ground strewn with the victims of mob violence. We are willing to concede that it is exceptional. So is our war. We grant that there is more than enough of vice and of the elements of disorder among us—for which we have mainly to thank our European revilers—and that we are liable, as are all great communities, to sudden outbreaks of violence. But we deny that the tendency of our institutions is, as represented, toward anarchy, or that "the mob" has hitherto manifested a disposition to lift a finger against the peace of society during the war. And we venture to caution our European journalists against "throwing stones," while they demonstrably "live in glass houses" and affect Crystal Palaces.

THE PROCLAMATION AND REBEL RETALIATION.—Our readers will recollect the outburst of rage with which the Emancipation Proclamation was greeted by the rebels, and the various schemes, differing only in the degree of brutality and barbarism that they exhibited, which were introduced into the rebel Congress as proper to be adopted in reference to it. It would seem from a recent article in the Richmond Whig that the final decision of the rebel Congress was to leave the whole matter to the discretion of JEFF. DAVIS, and as it is left to him, the Whig calls upon him to do something about it. And the measure which the Whig would have him adopt is to issue a proclamation—not a proclamation of counter emancipation, as some of our friends have seemed afraid would be done, not a proclamation that the whole thing was nugatory and might be utterly disregarded, as those few among us who hate emancipation have so loudly declared would be the view the rebels would take of it—not a proclamation quieting the apprehensions of the inhabitants and assuring the soldiers that they need have no fear of insurrections. None of all these things meet the views of the Whig. It is to be a proclamation "demanding that LINCOLN'S Emancipation Proclamation be rescinded," and "declaring that unless this is done, we shall send forces into the North to burn, ravage, desolate and destroy everything in their path."

We sincerely hope that JEFF. DAVIS will adopt this suggestion of the Whig. Such a proclamation would be all that was needed, if, indeed, anything is needed, to convince every one among us that the proclamation of emancipation is a terrible weapon, and one whose effect the rebels dread more than anything else. To our view that fact is entirely apparent already, and we are inclined to think it is to every one, except those who are blind because they will not see. And if that is so, who can doubt the wisdom of striking this blow? Shall we ever all learn in this struggle that it is entirely best for us to do what the rebels do not want us to do, and that any course of policy which they strive most strenuously to drive us from, should just on that account be held to more firmly, and pushed forward more vigorously? If we had only learned this lesson earlier we should have saved time and loss. We hope that it has been thoroughly mastered now, and that the most violent efforts of the rebels, whether by proclamation, or in any other way, to secure the withdrawal of that policy of emancipation, may be met only with a greater firmness and a greater calmness, and with more reliance upon the courage and spirit of the loyal citizens.

DISMAL READING.—The most dismal piece of literary composition we have read for many a day is the account of the manœuvres of Gens. BRAGG and BUELL in Kentucky, which we publish in another column. The telegraph has been strangely reticent regarding affairs in that State ever since the day when it was announced that BUELL had the whole rebel army in a "trap." We have had glimpses now and then of the rebels retreating and "closely pursued;" but we had no hints furnished of the state of affairs as now revealed. The manœuverings of BUELL are quite marvelous, and are certainly altogether inconsistent with the existence of the generalship which has heretofore been so widely accorded him in army and official circles.

The result of the whole Kentucky campaign, now that it has come to a close, is that the rebels, after marching to the northernmost boundary of the State, have effected a march out of it—(that, in one way of looking at it, is a gain to us)—bearing with them a "plunder train numbering over four thousand heavily laden wagons, a majority of which were captured from our forces," besides supplying themselves with unnumbered thousands of beef cattle, sheep and mules—those mentioned by the correspondent being only what they actually took away with them, and not including the immense droves that had previously been driven from Kentucky into East Tennessee. The rebel army has now established itself in East Tennessee, from whence it has easy lines of communication westward and eastward. BUELL'S army, or part of it is pretty well down in Southeastern Kentucky; but it will not attempt further movement in that direction. And so this wonderful campaign closes.

The simple trouble in the whole case seems to have been—BUELL'S slowness. On a dozen occasions he might have circumvented the enemy, cut off his retreat, divided his forces, or compelled him to fight; but on every occasion he was inevitably behind time. Since the close of this campaign, and the revelation of the facts in the case, we must reluctantly confess that we see little hope of successful results in the Southwest, so long as Gen. BUELL has the management of mititary affairs there.

IMPROVEMENT IN PHOTOGRAPHY.—Mr J. GARLIN, of No. 835 Broadway, has succeeded in introducing some new and beautiful improvements in the coloring of photographs, the result of many years of painful study. His process, which is strictly chemical, gives to the picture all the softness and roundness of a miniature on ivory, while it retains the minute accuracy of the photograph. The specimens of his art and skill well deserve inspection.

THE WAR IN THE SOUTHWEST.

FROM GEN. GRANT'S HEADQUARTERS.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Press.

JACKSON, Tenn., Tuesday, Oct. 14, 1862.

There is no news from below of immediate importance. It is said that JOE JOHNSON is at some point on the Railroad, south from Grand Junction. It is even said that he has 40,000 men already, though that is unquestionably a gross exaggeration. If BRAGG gets away from BUELL, as he probably will, there is some reason to fear that he will bring his whole force around into Mississippi, and attack us at Bolivar. In that case we should be obliged to have reinforcements before we could do anything with him.

I learned yesterday, from a citizen of Bolivar, in whose judgment I have every confidence, as well as in his sources of information, that PRICE had at least 30,000 men opposed to ORD and HURLBERT, in the fight of the Hatchie. Our force was but 5,300 at the outside, making no allowance for stragglers, baggage-guards and details for various kinds of service. The morning reports of the two brigades which went into action foot up 5,300. It is certainly the most brilliant victory on record in this war.

The fortifications at Memphis are completed, and that city may now be considered impregnable. No ordinary force could touch it, and no very large force could be gathered in the neighborhood without our knowing it in time to collect reinforcements. It is not at all likely that Memphis will ever be attacked. Its possession would be of no value to the rebels. If they should take it, they would get no stores of any importance. They could never hold it, because the fortifications would be of no use to them, being all on the immediate bank of the river, and easily shelled by our gunboats, which would also protect our Government stores. But Memphis will be of great value to us as a base of operations. It is as near the Southern Confederacy as Corinth is, and the enormous expense and danger attending the running of this line of railroad, amounting in all to 145 miles, would be avoided. Let this country take care of itself. If the people have a mind to cut each other up, let them go it. We can never occupy the whole Southern territory with troops; we must beat their armies where they are concentrated; starve them by a rigorous blockade; occupy important bases of operations, and then let them come to terms, as they unquestionably will. This road from Columbus to Corinth has served its purpose. The cotton is nearly out of the country.

The flying brigade under Gen. MCPHERSON, which pursued VAN DORN'S army from Corinth, has just returned. It will be remembered that the final repulse of the rebels from Corinth was made at noon. MCPHERSON'S Brigade arrived at night, and was sent on the next morning. Why ROSECRANS did not push right on that afternoon I cannot conceive. It is certain that he had the most positive orders to do so. Had he obeyed them, nearly the whole rebel army would have been caught between his army and that of ORD and HURLBERT, advancing obliquely on their flank. The result would have been the utter annihilation of the rebel army. As far, however, as we are able to judge, that desirable object has been pretty fully attained now. I have just had an interview with Gen. MCPHERSON, who conducted the advance guard of the pursuit, and from him I learn the following facts concerning the march and the return:

He left Corinth at daylight, Sunday morning, with a force of about 2,300 men, including three regiments of infantry, a squadron of cavalry, and a battery, and came up with the enemy just beyond the Chuvalia. From there, for five miles, he pushed them rapidly, skirmishing all the way until they reached a high ridge called Big Hill, where they made quite a stand, the infantry on both sides firing volleys. Our men had thrown away their knapsacks and blankets, and stripped for the fight, expecting to have a good brush, and were eager to meet the enemy, and clean him out before the balance of the force, who were three hours behind, could come up. So they charged up the hill in the most gallant style, but when they reached the top the rebels skedaddled in most inglorious style. By this time night closed in, and the men slept on their arms. Gen. MCPHERSON declares that if he had had a little more daylight he could have forced them into a battle and "cleaned them out." In this fight we lost eight men. They started again Monday morning at daylight, and came to the Tuscumbia Creek, where the bridge had been destroyed. The bridge was rebuilt in fifteen minutes. The stringers were lying in the water burning, and a regiment were ordered to tuck arms and go back a quarter of a mile and bring up, each man, a rail from a fence. These made a very good roadway for the artillery, and the pursuit continued. Between this and the Hatchie were evidences of a complete rout. Wagons, tents, baggage, knapsacks, guns, six caissons and a battery wagon, three boxes of new Enfield rifles, and a considerable quantity of ammunition, were found strewn along the road. No cannon were found. On they went, twelve miles, to Crumb's Mill, where they found the mill enveloped in flames, and the fire had to be extinguished before the bridge could be rebuilt. This caused a delay of about four hours, and the column reached Jonesboro' at 11 o'clock at night.

Bivouac during the night, and up again at daylight in the morning. They overtook the enemy two miles north of Ruckersville, which is forty-one miles from Corinth. Here we formed in line of battle, and brought up the artillery, but no fighting took place, beyond a few shells from our guns, the first of which burst in the midst of their cavalry, killed two men, and set the whole brood flying. The men had now been marching two days and a-half without much to eat, and a halt was made at Ruckersville; about twenty beef cattle driven in, and the men had a good, substantial meal. At half-past three the column again started, and, at about two miles from Ripley, again came upon the rear guard of the enemy, and from there into the town, which the cavalry entered at twelve o'clock at night. There was skirmishing all the time. The next morning the cavalry were sent seventeen miles beyond Ripley, and the infantry five, to a broken bridge, but no enemy was in sight. In the meantime the remainder of ROSECRANS' army had come up, and MCPHERSON'S brigade came back, staid at Ripley three days, and marched quietly back to Corinth, without seeing an armed rebel.

There is no question that this defeat is one of the cleanest things of the war. MCPHERSON took about 300 prisoners, all of whom were glad to be taken, being heartily tired of the war. By the way, several hundred paroled prisoners were sent South from Bolivar yesterday, and a great many of them were very reluctant to go. The indications are various and unmistakable that the rebels of this part of the country are ready for peace on any terms, only let it come soon. I have collected a good deal of information on this point, and shall soon write you the substance of it.

Gen. MCPHERSON, who is now Major-General, takes HURLBERT'S old division at Bolivar, and HURLBERT takes command of this sub-department. MCPHERSON is one of the best officers in the army. He has been doing the chief part of the engineer duty under GRANT and HALLECK ever since the war commenced, and has been conspicuous for his tact and assiduity. Now that he has command of a division, we shall expect to hear something from him.

REBEL REPORT OF THE CORINTH BATTLE.

Correspondence of the Grenada Appeal.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., Sunday, Oct. 12. 1862.

I am enabled at last to give you a tolerably detailed, and at least truthful account of the late fight at Corinth, so far as the first division of the Army of the Mississippi, under Gen. LOVELL is concerned. I deeply regret that I am not in possession of all the facts which would exhibit the share taken by those brave and tried men, under the much-loved PRICE.

You will remember that the junction of the two divisions under Gens. LOVELL and PRICE took place at Ripley, on the 28th ult., and according to Gen. VAN DORN'S order, moved toward Corinth—Gen. LOVELL, whose force numbered one-half that of Gen. PRICE, in advance.

On the 3d inst., Thursday, LOVELL'S advance was constantly engaged in heavy skirmishing, driving the enemy steadily backward, for six miles, from position to position, killing and wounding them in considerable numbers. PRICE here turned off, and taking position on the left of LOVELL'S Division, the army moved onward. Night put an end to the fighting.

Arriving at Indian Creek on Friday morning, the 3d, the enemy in front of LOVELL crossed and destroyed the bridge, and attempted, with all the artillery and infantry he could bring to bear, to prevent our crossing. Their efforts were futile, however, for the bridge was quickly reconstructed, and our gallant boys, under a galling fire, gained the other side to see them leave.

With PRICE on the left and LOVELL on the right, our army now steadily advanced, attacking the redoubts, breastworks and rifle-pits as they reached them, carrying everything, and occupying the various camps of the enemy as we came up; and, after a hard day's fight, night caught both divisions within the last but one of the stone line of works which kept us from Corinth. Two hours more of daylight would have decided the possession of Corinth itself: the Yankees would have been driven from the stronghold in which they had long revelled, and scattered into utter rout; for PRICE, on the left, had also worked his way gloriously. It was in this day's fight that LOVELL'S Division captured the "Lady Richardson," a beautiful 20-pounder Parrott gun, which had done some execution in our ranks. This trophy was brought off, and is now here, after having performed excellent service to the detriment of its former owners.

The plan of operations for the next day was as follows: PRICE, on the left, was to commence a furious cannonading at 4 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of drawing the enemy's attention from a point of the town which he was to assail with infantry. After the cannonading had continued fifteen minutes, LOVELL, on the right, was to advance, and when at the point favorable for the purpose, to storm the formidable obstacle to his entrance into the town.

The hour arrived, and, according to programme, PRICE opened with his artillery. In less than fifteen minutes the rattle of small arms was heard in the same direction, and LOVELL, supposing that everything was going on as well with PRICE as with himself, moved forward, and the fight became general. It seems, however, that during the night ROSECRANS had received eight thousand reinforcements from Iuka, Bluemil and Jacinto, and that immediately after PRICE commenced his cannonading the Yankees, who, before were greatly superior to us in force, had thrown a heavy column against PRICE'S right and centre. It was this sound of musketry which led to the supposition on the right, that PRICE had engaged the enemy with infantry, according to plan.

The fight continued with great severity, the enemy gradually forcing PRICE'S right, while his left was advancing, one of his brigades having actually succeeded in entering Corinth, but retired on account of the exhaustion of their cartridges.

LOVELL had only three brigades in his division, and at this moment, just as preparations were making to storm the works in his front, an order came from Gen. VAN DORN for a brigade to be sent to support PRICE'S right. The gallant VILLEPIGUE was immediately dispatched, but too late. The overwhelming force of fresh Yankee troops were thrown with crushing effect upon the hard pressed point, and those brave men, who had borne the brunt of many a hard battle, cheerfully endured unparalleled hardships, and won the most brilliant victories, gave way.

Gen. LOVELL was then ordered to withdraw his men from under fire, and support the retreat of the army. This order was promptly obeyed, notwithstanding the men were flushed with success, and, ignorant of the fate of our left, were confident of our triumphant entry in Corinth. The retreat began from this moment, Gen. LOVELL having been ordered by Gen. VAN DORN to bring up the rear with his division, which was most admirably done. The army camped that night at Chewalla, having marched ten miles from 2 o'clock P. M.

The next morning, Sunday, the army resumed its retreat, LOVELL'S Division still in the rear, followed by ROSECRANS' army, and Gen. BOWEN'S Brigade was engaged all the time. In the retreat our army had to cross the Tuscumbia and Hatchie rivers, which are five miles apart. After the main army had crossed the Tuscumbia, the gallant BOWEN remained behind long enough to whip back ROSECRANS; after which he crossed the river and burned the bridge.

Whilst this was going on, PRICE'S Division had reached Davis' Bridge, over the Hatchie, where it was met by Gen. ORD, with 5,000 fresh troops, and driven back. In this emergency, when the whole mass was in a trap as it were, between the two streams, Gen. LOVELL, by order of Gen. VAN DORN pressed forward rapidly with two of his brigades, under these competent and brave Generals, RUST and VILLEPIGUE, leaving BOWEN to keep ROSECRANS checked in the rear. VILLEPIGUE was thrown between PRICE'S force and ORD, whilst RUST was directed to go forward with Gen. PRICE, and assist in checking the enemy should he attempt to go up the left bank of the Hatchie from Pocahontas and oppose our crossing. How well Gen. RUST, Gen. VILLEPIGUE and Gen. BOWEN performed the duties assigned them, the present safety of our army abundantly testifies.

Beside the extrication of our forces from this perilous position, there was a compact mass of wagons between the two rivers, all of which were saved except four, (which were upset and broken by the sloping road over which they had to pass,) which train, when afterward put in line, measured over seven miles in length.

The retreat was still protected by LOVELL'S Division until the army reached a point four miles beyond Ruckerville, when PRICE was ordered on toward Ripley, and LOVELL sent back with his three brigades to Ruckerville, to hold the enemy in check, they having again taken up the pursuit. LOVELL'S Division overtook the forces of PRICE again at Hickory Flets, about eighteen miles from this place. Thence to this point, the enemy having stopped at Ripley.

I have omitted, in the proper place, to mention the fine cavalry force under Col. JACKSON, belonging to LOVELL'S Division. They performed every duty assigned them with promptness and energy, and deserve a place in the page when the history of the fight is written.

Of the loss of our gallant little army, I am unable to speak positively. The loss in Gen. LOVELL'S Division—killed and wounded—is three hundred and eighty. Men never fought more gallantly, nor more willingly, and I am pleased to say that as far as my observation extends, old prejudices among them have been effaced. As soon as I can get the facts in relation to PRICE'S Division, I will forward them.

FEDERAL LOSSES AT CORINTH.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Tuesday, Oct. 14.

Twenty-one hundred of ROSECRANS' wounded have arrived at Jackson, Tenn., and 1,100 at Bolivar. A large number still at Corinth.

Nearly all their dead buried by us were breastplated. RAMROD.

THE LATEST FROM NASHVILLE.

From the Cincinnati Commercial, Oct. 20.

MR. CHARLES H. GREEN, Claim Agent, at Nashville, Tenn., arrived in this city on Friday evening, direct from Nashville, bringing news which will give the greatest satisfaction to all who have been uneasy about the fate of that city. His intelligence is up to the 12th, on the morning of which he left Nashville. The fight at Lavergne had taken place before he started, and also the demand for the surrender of the city, which demand was all a hoax, and considered as a good joke, for there were no rebel forces anywhere in the vicinity of Nashville to enforce the demand: none, in fact, but the guerrillas under BENNETT, who fly about, here and there, scouring the country in every direction, and picking up any unlucky straggiers, and they are not strong enough to interfere with the armed foraging expeditions sent out from this city. Nashville was never safer than the day Mr. GREEN left it, and there are 7,000 of our troops there, under Gen. NEGLEY.

Gen. NEGLEY was strongly under the impression that it was a military necessity that Nashville should be evacuated; but Gov. ANDY JOHNSON, not being much of a military man, could not see it, and opposed it successfully, vowing that he would hold the place as long as there was a man to defend it, or one stone standing upon another in the Capitol house of the State. The health of the Governor is good, and his spirits do not seem to be depressed by the condition his city is in. Cut off from all communication with the North, he seems a man for the times, when energies rise to meet emergencies, instead of sinking at the first shock.

Mr. GREEN made the trip from Nashville to Lebanon Junction in a buggy, coming through Franklin, Bowling Green and Elizabethtown. He was accompanied by a lady, whose name, as a matter of delicacy, shall not be mentioned, who courageously offered to accompany him, and who performed a very important service for the Government, no less than carrying official dispatches from Gov. ANDY JOHNSON to WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Hon. HORACE MAYNARD and the Secretary of War. These dispatches, and other papers accompanying them, weighing some ten or twelve pounds, the lady carried in a bustle, made for the purpose, about her person; also, about $300,000 worth of Government claims, belonging to Mr. GREEN.

They were stopped three times by different parties of guerrillas belonging to BENNETT'S gang, and questioned pretty closely; but Mr. GREEN, who is an adept in the talking line, spoke so glibly and sneeringly of the Yankees that he completely bamboozled the guerrillas, and succeeded in making them believe he was a rebel; so they did not search either him or the lady with him, whom he passed as his wife. The guerrillas are fooled this time, and a Union lady has proved as smart as some of the secession ladies about Washington were months ago. The lady is safe in this city, and Mr. GREEN has left for Washington with the dispatches, which he will deliver in person, and receive the thanks which he deserves for the hazardous mission he undertook and successfully carried out.

The Policy of the Government in Respect to Maryland.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

We consider ourselves one of the warmest friends of the Government, and approve heartily of every measure that they think fit and proper for the suppression of the rebellion, provided they make it plain to common sense that they themselves are satisfied thereof. We would even go for the preservation of the Union and Constitution, or rather for their recovery, by trespassing upon the forms of the Constitution itself, when there remains no other means of doing so. But it is unaccountable and inconceivable to men of ordinary understanding how that great end can be accomplished by a system of lenity that contracts its ostensible purpose, and that not only does not conciliate, but makes enemies more bitter and mischievous, while it exasperates and discourages friends.

This system of lenity has been thoroughly tried in Maryland and has signally failed. First by the kind-hearted Gen. DIX, who in our opinion is much better, indeed fully qualified for the field or the Cabinet, than for the peculiar duties which were chiefly required of him when he was Chief of this military district. Since then it is apparent to the eyes and understanding of the loyal portion of the whole State that the present authorities of the Government in this military district have been still more unfortunate in their conduct and measures for the accomplishment of the same desirable purpose, namely, to arouse and encourage the loyal to the discharge of the full measure of their duty and patriotism, and either conciliating or compelling the disloyal to a due compliance with law and order. On the contrary, the evil of that false policy has greatly increased, and seems increasing under the existing authority, or under its pernicious influence; for indeed we scarcely know to whose or to what authority or influences we are really subject, for this disheartening aspect and state.

As this state of things in Baltimore particularly is notorious as noon day, it would seem impossible that the Government should not know it. That the Government should know it, and not correct the evil, would seem to be still more extraordinary. Surely this is no time to ignore the actual condition of the country, (infested as it is with traitors of every hue and degree,) and to turn the cold shoulder upon a State so largely loyal, under most difficult and harrassing circumstances, as Maryland has ever been, yet has a numerous band of traitors in her bosom, ready to take advantage of any ill-judged lenity, or any opportunity to furnish aid and comfort to the rebel cause. PATRICK HENRY.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 21.

A MISSIONARY'S DWELLING AND A CHURCH BURNED.—Intelligence has been received at the Rooms of the American Board in this City, of the destruction by fire of the church and Missionary's residence, at the station of Rev. DANIEL LINDLEY, in South Africa, entailing on him a heavy loss of books and household furniture. Many of the friends of this eminent missionary, and others who have heard his public addresses during his late visit to this country, will be glad to be informed that he is expected to sail from Boston, for Algoa Bay, with a portion of his family, on Saturday, the 25th inst. Communications, up to the morning of that day, will reach him if sent to the care of J. M. GORDON, Esq., Pemberton-square, in that city.

Vermont.

MESSAGE OF GOV. HOLBROOK.

In the message sent to the Vermont Legislature a few days since, Gov. HOLBROOK thus sets forth the position of that State:

"It is an occasion for renewed congratulation that the people of Vermont have again shown their devotion to the cause of the Union by laying aside, almost unanimously, all considerations, of a partisan character, and uniting in earnest support of the National Government which is charged with the high duty of defending and maintaining that sacred cause. The position of Vermont in this great life-struggle of the nation can neither be questioned nor misunderstood. The blood of her sons has reddened many battle-fields, and their valor and endurance have vindicated her historical renown. Her people admit no thought of concession to, or compromise with, the causeless and wicked rebellion now striking at the vitals of the nation, and their determination is fixed to endure and fight, and sacrifice, till the Government established by the wisdom, the patriotism, and the blood of our fathers is restored in its beneficent and rightful sway over every portion of our Union.

The struggle in which the nation is engaged is clearly one of life or death. Even though the scene of blood and the night of calamity through which we may be called to pass, shall shake the land to its foundations and try us to the utmost, yet, trusting in the God of our fathers, we will not doubt that life is to be the result, and that the nation is to be purified by its trials and established and exalted even beyond the expectations of its founders. Our fathers found a great evil which they deplored, but could not separate from the good. Current events are tending to produce that separation, by uprooting the evil. The rebellion, if persisted in, may be the means, under Providence, of annihilating the Institution of Slavery, which all acknowledge to have been its cause. The territory of the United States must be preserved in its integrity. Neither foreign power nor domestic insurrection can be allowed to establish a rival Government within any portion of that territory, and, therefore, all necessary means justified by the ultimate law of self-preservation and compatible with Christian civilization, must be applied to the permanent suppression of the present rebellion. The recent Proclamation of Emancipation by the President of the United States is a logical result of the slaveholders' rebellion, and as such it is accepted, and will be sustained by all loyal men. It is a "military necessity," and has the recommendation to our people of according with both justice and humanity.

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Grave and weighty responsibilities rest upon us in this great crisis. Let us show ourselves equal to our duties. Whatever we have to do, let us do it with one heart and one mind. However humble, we are a part of the American Union, and have a vital interest in its preservation. It is a Union consecrated to Freedom, and it falls to our lot and that of our generation to prove the ability of freemen to defend and preserve their birthright. Our institutions are passing through a baptism of blood. They must and will be maihtained, at whatever sacrifice; and in the momentous issue which is upon us, neither temporary reverses will discourage, nor partial successes duly elate us. Relying upon the incontrovertible justice of our cause, the bravery, patriotism and intelligence of the soldiers of the Union, the unconquerable determination, and the spirit of American liberty actuating the loyal people of the country, we may confidently look forward to and patiently await the time when our beloved Republic, under the providence of God, shall be re-established in unity and power, and afford a triumphant vindication of the capacity of a free people to govern themselves.

FREDERICK HOLBROOK.

Resistance to the Draft in Pennsylvania.

HARRISBURGH, Pa., Wedesday, Oct. 22.

In one or two districts a disposition is manifested to resist the enforcement of the draft.

Gov. CURTIN has prepared himself fully for any emergency, and has authority to use any troops within the State to enforce the laws at every hazard.

The draft has been patriotically sustained in nearly all the counties, and transportation has been procured for most of the drafted men to the rendezvous.

Provost-Marshals have been nominated by the Governor to the Secretary of War for several counties and they will be promptly appointed. They will receive instructions and be fully empowered to enforce the laws faithfully.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

A NEW BANNER FOR THE FOURTEENTH REGIMENT.—A meeting of ladies and gentlemen was held at the Brooklyn Tabernacle last evening, for the purpose of taking measures to procure a new flag for the Brooklyn Fourteenth Regiment, the one which they took with them from the city having been perforated with bullet-holes, and torn into shreds, from long and severe service on many battle-fields.

Rev. J. F. BOOTH, of the Fleet-street M. E. Church, presided, and addresses were made by Rev. Messrs. HESTON and SEARLES, and Hon. M. F. ODELL.

The following resolutions, offered by Mr. HESTON, were adopted.

Whereas, The surviving members of the Brooklyn Fourteenth Regiment, having sent home their torn, weather-worn and battle-scarred standard, to bear witness of the many conflicts through which it has been bravely borne; and whereas, the regiment is now without a standard or ensign: therefore

Resolved, That the Brooklyn Fourteenth has covered itself with glory, and is entitled to the gratitude of all the loyal, and especially the sympathy of the wives, mothers, daughters and sisters in this community. That we hold ourselves indebted to their bravery, their self-sacrifice, their patient devotion to the flag, and that the many noble men who have fallen in battle and wasted away with sickness, shall ever be enshrined in our memory and cherished in our hearts.

Resolved, That we, the ladies of Brooklyn, claim the privilege of replacing the regimental standard, and thus unfurl our love for our country, and exhibit our gratitude to its defenders, confident that the new banner will never be dishonored by those who shall bear it.

The following Executive Committee of ladies was appointed to take charge of the subscriptions: Madams Odell, Lincoln, Booth, Bartlet, Foss, Bowen and Heston. After which the meeting adjourned.

CONVICTION AND SENTENCE FOR ARSON.—A young man, 18 years of age, named MICHAEL DONNELLY, was brought before the Kings County Court of Sessions yesterday, having previously been convicted of arson in the second degree. It appeared on the trial that on the night of the 16th of May last, a woodshed, near the corner of Cooper's-lane and First-street, Eastern District, was discovered to be on fire, and the prisoner was detected in running away from the place, after the flames had commenced to spread. The object appeared to be to bring out the fire engines. Some dwellings in immediate proximity were occupied by a number of families, which rendered the offence the more serious. The jury recommended the prisoner to mercy, and the Court sentenced him to State Prison for the term of seven years, the shortest time allowed by the statutes.

REPUBLICAN MEETING.—The Banner Republican Club, of Brooklyn, will meet to-night, at No. 9 Court-street. Business of importance will be transacted. Let every Ward be fully represented.

DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN.—Rev. Dr. THOS. T GRION, Rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, died in Milton, Conn., on the 21st inst. His disease was softening of the brain.

BROOKLYN CITY COURT CALENDAR—Thursday, Oct. 23.—Nos. 19, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 52, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64.

THE WEEKLY TIMES.

THE NEW-YORK WEEKLY TIMES is published THIS MORNING, and may be had at the counter of the publication office in wrappers ready for mailing. In addition to containing the latest intelligence by telegraph up to the moment of going to press, there will be found in the current number full details of all military movements in the different departments from the pens of our special correspondents. The Movements in State Politics, with the Election returns from all the States so far as received will be found in this morning's issue. The Sixth of Mr. HURLBERT'S Series of Letters appears in the current number. All official orders, reports and documents, and the latest and fullest Washington news, will be found in the WEEKLY TIMES. European news, with graphic letters from our correspondents in London and Paris, is made a special and permanent feature. In addition to Editorials on all the current topics of the day, the WEEKLY TIMES has a page of carefully prepared commercial matter, giving the latest financial news and market reports: items of agricultural and domestic interest, compiled from sources many of which are otherwise inaccessible to the American reader; and marriages and deaths of the week.

The "RECORD OF THE WEEK," or news summary—being a careful synopsis and digest of the news of the day both rebellion and general—is alone worth double the subscription price to the paper, as it preserves in a condensed and conveniently classified form all news of interest, and must prove valuable as a record to all time.

Morton's Gold Pens.—Prices to suit the pocket and pens to suit the hand of every writer at No. 25 Maiden-lane. Call or inclose stamp for circular, with engravings of all sizes and styles.

The Best Soap in Use.

JAMES PYLE'S

O. K. SOAP.

Every housekeeper that tries it uses no other. It not only lessens labor, but, being pure and hard, will go much further than ordinary Soap. It is good for the Toilet, for Shaving, and just the thing for washing Muslins and laces. One pound will make three gallons of good Soft-Soap. In fact, no other Soap is required about the house when PYLE'S O. K. SOAP is in use. The most intelligent classes in New-York use it. Editors of most of the religious papers patronize it. Editors of the N. Y. Tribune and Evening Post use it, and everybody will when they have tried it.

PYLE'S SALERATUS and CREAM TARTAR are also the most popular of any in use, deservedly so.

Sold by grocers everywhere. Manufactured corner of Washington and Franklin sts., New-York.

Martin Luther once thought he saw the devil in his chamber, and threw an inkstand at his head. Had they had in those days AYER'S PILLS to exorcise all the devils that come from a disordered stomach, his laughable fright would not have become a matter of history.

MEDICAL.

MATRIMONIAL HAPPINESS.

Thirty years' successful experience enables Dr. H. A. BARROW to adopt a reliable mode of treatment, that will assuredly remove every cause of matrimonial disappointment, unwilling celibacy, and physical and mental prostration.

TRIESMAR, Nos. 1, 2 and 3—The well-known remedies for the cure of self-inflicted diseases in all their stages, and as purifiers of the system, may be procured as usual from Dr. BARROW. Purchasers of a $3 package entitled to advice without a fee. Office, No. 194 Bleecker-st., four doors from McDougal-st., New-York. Hours from 11 till 2, and from 4 till 8.

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE shortest possible time, by Dr. WARD & CO., No. 12 Laight-st., near Canal, without the use of Mercury, loss of time or change of diet. Dr. WARD, from the hospitals of London, Paris and Edinburgh, is the discoverer of the only certain and reliable remedies for diseases of a private character. In 28 years' practice he has cured more cases of Secret Diseases and Wrong Treatment than all others combined. I can and will cure you in less time and expense than any one can or will, and those who have been robbed of their money and health, call; it will take but little money and time to restore you. If you have been unfortunate call at once. By his special experience in this much-neglected branch of medical science he is enabled to guarantee a cure in the most complicated cases. Recent cases of Gonorrhea or Syphilis cured in few days, without change of diet or hindrance from business. Secondary Syphilis—the last vestige eradicated without the use of Mercury. Involuntary emissions stopped in a short time. Sufferers from impotency, or loss of sexual power, restored to full vigor in a few weeks. Permanently and speedily cured by new treatment. Persons at a distance, failing to receive prompt treatment elsewhere, may get a permanent cure effected by writing a full diagnosis of their case, addressed to Dr. WARD & CO., No. 12 Laight-st., the only place.

H. BOSTWICK, M. D.—PHYSICIAN, OPERATING and consulting surgeon and lecturer on diseases of the genital organs of both sexes, has just published a valuable work on seminal diseases, impotency, womb complaints, &c., &c., and it is, without doubt, the most truthful and practical work of the kind extant. Delay in these cases are dangerous; read it before 'tis too late. Price, $1. Dr. B. is also the author of a large, splendid book on private diseases, with seventy colored plates, as large as life, and it is equal, in all respects, to anything of the kind ever published. Price, $5.—From the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal. Mailed by E. WARNER, No. 1 Vesey-st., or they may be had at the author's office, No. 35 East 12th-st., where he can be confidentially consulted on these obscure and troublesome diseases.

DR. COBBETT, MEMBER OF THE N. Y. University, (Medical College,) and Royal College of Surgeons, London, has removed from No. 19 Duane-st., to his present very convenient suite of offices at No. 23 Centre-st., between Chambers and Reade-sts., with a private entrance at No. 6 City Hall-place, where he can be consulted with the most honorable confidence on all diseases affecting the urinary organs; thirty years in his present specialty, (three of which have been at the Hospitals of this City,) enable him to guarantee a cure in every case undertaken, or make no charge. Strictures of the urethra, impotency, seminal weaknesses, &c., treated on the most scientific principles. N. B.—As a proof of Dr. C.'s qualifications, he would call special attention to his Diplomas, which can be seen in his office.

SURE CURE.—DR. POWERS, SUCCESSFULLY consulted with Dr. WARD, No. 12 Laight-st. He gives advice free, and guarantees an immediate cure or no pay. Glorious triumph of medicine. Dr. POWERS' sure specific remedies for syphilitic, mercurial and all other delicate diseases; for certainty unapproached, and for the entire eradication of disease, nothing besides can positively be relied upon; try them and be convinced. Dr. POWERS' Essence of Life restores the vigor of youth in four weeks. This marvelous agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitutions. Office No. 12 Laight-st. Dr. POWERS' French Preventive, the greatest invention of the age. Those who have used them are never without them. Price, $1 per dozen; mailed free on receipt of the price. Address Dr. POWERS, No. 12 Laight-st.

DR. COOPER, NO. 14 DUANE-ST., MAY BE confidently consulted on all diseases of a private nature. A practice of 30 years, devoted to the treatment and cure of Syphilitic, Mercurial, and diseases of a delicate nature, enables Dr. C. to make speedy and permanent cures, no matter of how long standing the case may be. Strictures of the urethra and seminal weakness brought on by a secret habit, effectually cured. The victims of misplaced confidence, who have been misled by quack advertisements, can call on Dr. C. with the certainty of being radically cured. N. B.—Dr. C. is a qualified physician and surgeon, and a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New-York. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 9 P. M.

AN ACT OF GRATITUDE.—20,000 COPIES of a medical book for gratuitous circulation, by a sufferer, who has been effectually cured of nervous debility, loss of memory and dimness of sight, resulting from early errors, by following the instruction given in a medical work, considers it his duty, in gratitude to the author, and for the benefit of consumptives and nervous sufferers, to publish the means used. He will, therefore, send free to any address, on receipt of two 3-cent stamps, a copy of the work, containing every information required. Address Box No. 379 Post-office, Albany, N. Y.

IMPORTANT TO THE MARRIED AND THOSE ABOUT TO BE MARRIED.—Dr. A. M. MACRICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, has just published the 160th edition of the valuable book, entitled "THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION," strictly intended for those whose health or circumstances forbid a too rapid increase of family. PRIVATE CONSULTATION.—DR. HUNTER has, for thirty years, confined his attention to diseases of a certain class, in which he has treated no less than fifty thousand cases, without an instance of failure. His great remedy, HUNTER'S RED DROP, cures certain diseases, when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without confining or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six hours; cures without the dreadful consequent effects of mercury, but possesses the peculiarly valuable property of annihilating the rank and poisonous taint that the blood is sure to absorb, unless his remedy is used. This is what he claims for it, and what no other will accomplish. Its value in this respect has become so well known, that scientific men in every department of medical knowledge begin to appreciate it, for hardly a week passes that he is not consulted by druggists, chemists and physicians, in regard to some pitiful patient, who has exhausted the whole field of the faculty, and still the disease will appear. Its popularity is so great, that there is not a quack doctor in the City that has not attacked it; and when they find their lies are not so easily swallowed, they then pretend that they can make it. It is $1 a vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 3 Division-st. Book for 15 three-cent stamps, 180 pages, 100 colored illustrations. The best work out.

Mass Meeting at the Academy of Music.

Speeches by Hon. Horatio Seymour, John Van Buren, David R. Floyd Jones, and Others.

A Great Concourse and Plenty of Cheering—Resolutions, &c.

The "unterrified" of Kings County turned out en masse last evening, or rather turned into the Brooklyn Academy of Music, at a rate that suggested the inquiry where they could all have come from. However, there they were, and for numbers, noise and vehement approbation of the sentiments uttered by their speakers, the concourse was certainly an imposing one.

The meeting was called for 7½ o'clock, but long before that hour the streets adjacent to the Academy were thronged with a playful crowd, who vented their impatience while waiting for the opening of the doors, with cheers for sundry popular favorites, and a variety of quaint and timely hits at local and National affairs.

The moment the doors were opened, the multitude rushed into the Academy like a rising sea, and the vast interior was filled, from parquet to dome, in a very few minutes. The Academy, at all times, presents a fine spectacle, but packed as it was, last night, with an overplus of bustling, excited humanity, it was magnificent to behold. From four to five thousand human beings packed the edifice, which was lighted to the utmost capacity of its arrangement.

The stage was fully displayed, and by ingenious management made to represent an immense front space and back-ground for the officers, speakers, guests and reporters of the meeting. The elegant decorations of the house rendered any other additional ornament than the National colors superfluous. Sets of these were handsomely draped on either wing of the proscenium, where they trailed and waved in the breath of the multitude. The stage boxes on both sides were occupied by parties of ladies, who evidently enjoyed the excitement hugely.

At the appointed hour of opening, Dodworth's Band, twenty pieces strong, struck up "Hail Columbia," amid tremendous cheering. The "Red, White and Blue," "Star-Spangled Banner," and "Yankee Doodle" were next given with equal success. Calls from the galleries for "Garryowen" were responded to by the performance of that celebrated Irish political air, and the "Marseillaise Hymn" wound up the musical interlude, until the sudden and early appearance of Mr. SEYMOUR gave the signal for a perfect tempest of cheering, amid which the band performed "See the Conquering Hero Comes." When this vehement prelude of instruments and voices had ceased, Mr. JAMES B. CRAIG, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, called the meeting to order, and nominated for Chairman

Hon. SAMUEL SLOAN who, on assuming his duties, spoke as follows:

FELLOW CITIZENS: I most sincerely thank you for the honor you have done me in electing me to preside over this meeting. It is no formal thanks I tender; this is a solemn, a serious hour to our country. We are here, loyal citizens, (applause.) devoted to our country, our whole country, to the Union as it was [appalause;] to the Constitution as it is; [Applause.] I shall say no more, but leave it to others. We have come to-night to uphold our candidates for the State of New-York. [Applause.]

Mr. WM. M. PARKS then read a list of eight-eight Vice-Presidents and sixteen Secretaries, which were unanimously accepted.

Mr. J. L. DOUGLASS read a series of two resolutions, the first of which indorsed the party nominations, and the second embraced, in terms, the platform of the recent Democratic State Committee.

The names of the local candidates of the Democracy were next read, and received with great enthusiasm, whereupon the Chairman, amid tremendous cheering, presented to the audience the Democratic candidate for the Governorship of New-York.

SPEECH OF HON. HORATIO SEYMOUR.

The speaker opened by remarking that the relations of the two great parties of the country had been materially changed. The recent elections had demonstrated that the Democratic Party was now the grand conservative element of the North, and that the country demanded a true, patriotic, just and conservative policy of Government. [Applause.] It had justly been said that the life of our nation is imperiled, and involving, as it does, all our highest interests, we are bound to approach the question with a high and holy sense of our responsibility. He would use no invective, no epithet, no terms of reproach in reference to the past, but would implore his antagonists to listen not to his wisdom, but to the wisdom of our Fathers—to yield not to his views, but to the views of those who had made our country great and prosperous. Speaking, then, on behalf of a great conservative party, destined hereafter to shape the policy of the country, he would be plain and outspoken. He desired to go to the Executive chair of the Commonwealth, if sent there with his entire range of opinions openly before the people. [Renewed applause.] He recognized the fact that the honor, glory and destiny of the country now hung poised upon the issue of the existing conflict, and it was the duty of every citizen to see that his power and his influence should be cast on the side of the flag of the Union. [Tremendous cheering.] He had already, in all parts of the State, called upon the young men among our fair hills and valleys to choose this part—this noble part—because he thought it their loftiest duty. [Applause.] And this appeal he now renewed. [Great applause.] He did not ignore the existence of parties in the country; on the contrary he deemed them even necessary to the political health of the Republic. Still, in view of the radical ticket selected by the antagonistic party at Syracuse, intended to mark a distinct and separate line of policy, he felt called upon to appeal to all Conservatives to rally around the ancient pillars of the Constitution as it is, and the Union as it was! [Vehement acclamation.] This was the Democratic policy; this was the platform on which he and his friends must stand or fall! [Renewed applause.] And in this declaration he expressed no feeling other than the honest aspirations of a loyal citizen. He had opposed Mr. LINCOLN'S election and the policy he had since adopted, but he bowed to the rightful authority of the Chief Magistrate duly elected. An improper unpopular officer is to be got rid of in a legal manner by the people, not by factious opposition. Mr. LINCOLN was recognized by the Democratic Party as the constituted head of the Government and they offered him no conditional support. Their policy was the policy of loyalty! [Enthusiastic cheering.] Nearly two years ago when the Republican papers were denouncing the President, the Democracy sustained the principles they now profess. It was the extreme Radical Governor of the State of Massachusetts [hisses] and a journalist who expressed the Radical feeling of his party and their associates who had been foremost in embarrassing the Government and in hindering the successful prosecution of the war. [applause] Armies and armaments are vain unless the Government, be sustained and the principles of order and obedience to constituted authorities be upheld. Concert of action alone can put down this wicked rebellion. Let the Radicals throw away the higher law doctrine of their own ideas and unite with us; let them be as loyal as we are in this contest and we shall again make our country what it was but three short years since—the glory, the wonder and admiration of the world. Insubordination must be rebuked in the army, the departments of the Government and the action of citizens. Who in the army had thus cheerfully and readily obeyed all orders, assuming all positions ascribed to them, discarding all their own desires and ambitions? [McCLELLAN! McCLELLAN! and immense cheering.] The people must be fairly dealt with—there must be no more withholding of the truth from the popular eye. [Tremendous applause.] The speaker here feelingly indicated the dispiriting and disorganizing effect of false statements of the resources, the courage, the tenacity of the South, the garbled accounts of battles, and the misstatement of results and losses. The history of the Revolution, of the late war, and of the contest with Mexico, was familiar to all. In this portion of the address an allusion to JACKSON and to TAYLOR elicited prolonged acclamation.

The source of this fearful war had been the mistakes industriously inculcated into the minds of those who are to-day the radicals, from the school-room, the Press and the Pulpit, which had preached false doctrine. Concealing a truth does not destroy a truth. Could you close our lips to all debate, you cannot avert the disasters that falsehood must entail upon us. Hide your gold, lock us up if you will, but the sad, stern facts of every day are telling a fearful tale. This great conservative party that will govern our country hereafter—[rounds of applause]—will, in the mighty political revolution now progressing, save the country, and save even the radicals themselves to all the benefits of liberty. In the hour of their success, the Democracy will not repeat the unworthy threats now indulged in by their violent opponents. [Prolonged applause.] Attacks upon individuals are not to be allowed to divert the attention of the people from the mismanagement of our public officers. [Loud assent.] Our opponents say that the country is in danger, but, ah! they will not allow you to talk about those things which do endanger the nation's life. Among these perils the most gigantic is the corruption visible in public affairs. This we may attempt, by suppression of all criticism, to conceal, but, as an individual who hides from himself the gnawing ruin within him must all the sooner perish, so must a nation, doing likewise, die. This is our country's danger. Better have it ravaged by fire and by sword, whose scars will pass away, than hug to our bosoms that which will not only destroy the National authority, but, also, stain indelibly the National character! An honest and upright administration of all departments of our Government, in places high or humble, is, then, one indispensable element for the salvation of the country. [Applause.]

Under Democratic rule, lasting through eighty years, as the Republicans are fond of saying, the country had risen to the glorious position it held so brief a period since. [Applause.] The Democracy had made it such by following the traditions of their fathers, and by keeping in the beaten track of the patriarchs of the Republic. Mr. SEYMOUR, in conclusion, warned the South not to mistake the the import of the recent Democratic triumphs in the North.

He, for one, would, so long as he had a voice to speak or an arm to raise, adhere to the cause of his country. God knew how he loved it, and how eagerly he longed to serve it most efficiently and faithfully! The Democracy were the party of the Union, and he, at least, would never consent to the dishonor of its glorious flag or the dissolution of its inestimable compact—never; no, never!

The final apostrophe of the orator to the past and future greatness and harmony of the Republic and the perpetuity of its written Constitution was crowned with an outburst of vehement applause that shook the massive edifice to its centre, and was heard for squares around.

When the tumult which followed the close of Mr. SEYMOUR'S remarks had subsided, the Chairman announced the who spoke in substance as follows:

He concurred fully in the sentiment just uttered by Mr. HORATIO SEYMOUR. Mr. WADSWORTH, he said, was the open and malignant enemy of Gen. MCCLELLAN. No less a person than Gen. WELSH, the Commissary of the State, had declared that Gen. WADSWORTH had openly stated so to him. Has Gen. WADSWORTH ever attempted to deny that he is hostile to Gen. MCCLELLAN. No; and no such attempt will ever be made. Is Gen. WADSWORTH now friendly to Gen. MCCLELLAN? No! He is the same now as he ever used to be. The President once removed MCCLELLAN from the head of the army; but he saw the error of his ways, and has replaced him. [Cheers.] Could not Gen. WADSWORTH now admit that the President has done what is right, and acknowledge that MCCLELLAN is the proper man? Cannot Gen. WADSWORTH admit that he was in error? It is still time to do so. If, while sitting in his luxurious home at Washington, with MCCLELLAN in the field at the head of his army, so sadly in want of the necessaries of life; if while in a subordinate capacity he is now working against his superior officer, he is a traitor to his country, [applause,] and more deserving of a gibbet than JEFFERSON DAVIS! If he approves the course of the President reinstating MCCLELLAN, let him say so; not that it would alter the result of the election, but it would be a consolation to him in his defeat, a sort of death-bed repentance. [Laughter and applause.] With regard to the letter of Gen. SCOTT, read by him at the Cooper Institute, he said that it had now been published in the National Intelligencer, and he supposed that its authenticity was beyond dispute. He stated at the time that he was not authorized by Gen. SCOTT to lay it before the public. Mr. LINCOLN and Mr. SEWARD know that it is authenticated, but he had said he was not authorized by them to make it public. He agreed with them, when they said they had no knowledge how it was obtained, and looking at the history of the country for the past eighteen months, he would ask agree with them that there were many other things of which they had no knowledge. [Laughter.] There were only two persons who had any right to complain; they were Gen. SCOTT and Mr. SEWARD, and when they asked for an explanation he was quite ready to answer them. The letter was obtained by him in a manner that is a secret, which a most highly accomplished and beautiful lady is helping him to keep. Any one who publishes private letters, should be banished from the society of gentlemen; but when it comes to publishing the letters of the dead, that partakes of the character of the hyena and the jackal. What, he asked, did his Republican friends think of publishing the letter of the dead KEARNEY? [Hisses.] Mr. VAN BUREN then denied the statement made in a contemporary paper, that he dined with Gen. SCOTT previous to speaking at the meeting in Cooper Institute; that story originated with Mr. CHARLES KING, of Columbia College, who had once the distinguished honor of attacking a dead woman—MRS. JACKSON—in order to wound the feelings of Gen. JACKSON. Many persons wished to abolish Slavery, and even threw the institutions of the South. Mr. WADSWORTH waved to whip the South and then let it go, and the New-York Tribune was the champion of this proposition. What the Democrats wanted was the unconditional submission of the South, and to abide by the laws of the country. [Applause.] No! said the speaker, his idea was to march on and take Richmond. When Gen. SCOTT took Mexico, no one thought of young into the provinces. When Paris and Vienna were captured, in those cities was found a natural resting-place for the war. He had no idea that they should go further than Richmond; he, for one, would not want to. When there, he should want to sit down. [Laughter.] He did not quarrel with those Republicans who desire to see the last cent expended and the last soldier killed. When at Richmond, he would say, "Gallant GARDLEY, advance! Forward the Block Brigade! Go on to the inglorious of South Carolina, and when there, in fear of another uprising stay there forever. [Laughter and applause.] If, when the Union troops had marched into Richmond, a National Convention should be called, it would, no doubt, bring on reunion. Both North and South had seen that they were foemen worthy of each other's steel, and what destruction they could mutually work. They would then be content to live in peace together under the old flag and Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. VAN BUREN then made some remarks relative to an article in the Evening Post touching his morality, and stated that he now gave notice that he intended to enter into the comparative examination of his own moral character and that of Gen. WADSWORTH'S at Rochester next Monday, unless, in the meantime, the editor of that journal withdrew these charges against him, and forever passerved silence in reference to that subject. [Loud cheers.] The spotless reputation of Mr. SEYMOUR none assailed, or could assail. [Applause.]

The speaker finally referred to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, declaring it to be unprecedented and unnecessary. Even in the darkest period of the War of 1812, when CHARLES KING was justifying the slaughter of American prisoners at Dartmoor—in the conflict with Mexico, when CORWIN, in Congress, was praying for our soldiers a welcome "with bloody hands to hospitable graves," nothing of the kind had been attempted—and now, if for the sentiments he (the speaker) uttered, the vision of the claret colored coat and FOUR LAFAYETTE should be made a reality—[laughter]—he would exclaim, "Advance, SIMEON DRAPER!" for the end would be that the worthy Provost would repeat the words of his venerable namesake—"Lord! let now thy servant depart in peace!" [Renewed laughter and applause.]

Referring to the recent elections in Pennsylvania, Indiana and Ohio, the speaker hoped that the President would heed the condemnation pronounced by the latter on the course of his Secretary, Mr. CHASE, and replace him, not by a Democrat—that he did not ask—but by an honest, patriotic, brave man, like JOHN J. CRITTENDEN, [cheers,] a Kentuckian, one in whom he may entirely trust. He had never seen a woman, a man or horse from Kentucky that was not distinguished by beauty, bravery and fidelity. [Applause.] Mr. VAN BUREN then alluded to the immense wealth of the opposing party and the "army of contractors" and exhorted the Democrats not only to stand firm and united but to receive with encouragement the whitome followers of HENRY CLAY, now rushing to their aid. With humorous allusions to Mr. BANCROFT'S "misty" letter and the interest felt by the Republican Party in his own movements, he, once more called upon his hearers to rally to the Constitution and the Union terminating with the motto:

"In hoc signo vincemus."

The next speaker called was

who was warmly received, and proceeded to make a brief address, mainly referring to the course he proposed to pursue, if elected, in sustaining the Government and the Union. To a loyal and complete devotion he pledged all his efforts, exhorting obedience to all the constituted authorities. A reference to Gen. MCCLELLAN was heartily applauded.

Cries for O'GORMAN, BRADY, ODELL, and others, followed, during which the Chairman adjourned the meeting.

OUTSIDE MEETINGS.

On the Montague-street side of the Academy two stands were erected, and an immense crowd of citizens gathered around them to listen to the lesser orators. At Stand No. 1, Mr. D. T. BROWN presided, and FREDERICK W. KALBFLEISCH and JAMES HOWE, Jr., were appointed Secretaries. At Stand No. 2, WM. BEARD, Esq., was called to the Chair, and DEWITT BOGARDUS and JAMES B. MURTHA acted as Secretaries. The usual addenda of calcium lights, flags, banners, &c., were used in profusion, and the aid of music was brought in to inspire the masses assembled. Cheers for SEYMOUR and Gen. MCCLELLAN were loud and frequent; and each speaker, on being introduced, was received with huzzas and "tigers." Young America, as usual, scattered himself throughout the swaying crowds, and cheered vociferously for anybody and everything that was proposed. Pyramids of gas-lamps were tastefully arranged near the stands, and these, in addition to the calcium lights which had been extemporized for the occasion, made everything in the vicinity as bright as day. Numbers of ladies, notwithstanding the coolness of the atmosphere, accompanied by their husbands, fathers and brothers, helped to swell the crowd, and seemed to take a deep interest in the proceedings. Delegations from various Wards made their appearance soon after the proceedings commenced, and their advent was loudly hailed by the masses of the unterrified. As was the case at the Cooper Institute mass meeting, a large number of Republicans were "lookers-on in Vienna," and extemporized speeches were gotten up between them and their Democratic friends touching the platforms and policies of the two opposing parties, the chances of success for their favorite candidates, &c., all of which, though carried on with earnestness, were characterized by good feeling. A rumor that RICHARD O'GORMAN, Esq., would speak from Stand No. 1 having obtained circulation among the crowd about 8½ o'clock, caused a hurrying thither of a large number of persons, who were listening to Hon. MOSES F. ODELL, at Stand No. 2. The expectants were, however, doomed to disappointment, Mr. O'GORMAN not being present. Couriers arrived every few minutes at the stands from the meeting inside the building, and reported the progress of operations there, much to the satisfaction, apparently, of the outsiders. The announcement that Mr. SEYMOUR had closed his speech with a declaration that the Union should never be dissolved, brought forth hearty applause for the gubernatorial candidate, and the statement that JOHN VAN BUREN, Esq., had commenced his speech gave rise to three hearty cheers for the "Prince." The crowd about the door leading to the back part of the stage button-holed every one who emerged from there as to Mr. VAN BUREN'S speech, the anxious inquiry being, "Did he tell where and how he got possession of Gen. SCOTT'S letter?" The negative reply which was always given to this query seemed to disappoint the questioners, who evidently had got the idea into their heads that Prince JOHN was on this occasion going to make a clean breast of the whole affair. The speaking at the stands having been concluded, the crowd fell into line, bearing illuminated banners, on which were inscribed the names of the candidates and devices usual among the Democracy on all campaigning occasions, and marched down Fulton-street, headed by a band of music. Before the inside meeting had adjourned, the outsiders had closed their proceedings, and the stands were deserted, save by a few of the young Democracy who were explaining their views regarding the issues involved in a manner at once striking and peculiar. The speakers at the outside meetings were Hon. MOSES F. ODELL, Judge S. D. MORRIS, Hon. EDMUND DRIGGS, E. O. PERRIN, Ex-Alderman WILSON, J. L. DOUGLASS, and others.

At a very late hour, the dispersing throng still made the thoroughfares ring with their tread.

GEN. BUELL'S CAMPAIGN.

History of Buell's March through Kentucky—The Attempt to Capture Bragg—The Battle of Perryville—What the Rebels Accomplished—No Victory on Either Side—What the Rebels Intend to Do, &c.

Correspondence of the Cincinnati Commercial.

MOUNT VERNON, Ky., Friday, Oct. 17, 1862.

Gen. BUELL'S campaign in Kentucky is at an end. BRAGG and all his forces are beyond the reach of the Army of the Ohio—ere this, doubtless, safely quartered on the other side of the Cumberland Mountains. If Gen. BUELL'S late mission was simply to drive the rebels from this State, and thus in a measure redeem the fatal error of Gen. MANSON at Richmond, on the 30th of August, then he has accomplished all that was intended; if, however, it was expected of him to defeat or destroy the invading army, there is little to compensate the Union troops for the privations and sufferings they have undergone since they left Louisville on the 1st day of October. The campaign has been a brief one, but sleepless nights, long marches, and want of shelter have rendered it fatiguing and wearisome.

When our army left Louisville, the pickets of the rebels were within six miles of the city, though the main body was between twenty and thirty miles distant. Federal pickets are seldom thrown out more than two miles beyond their camps, but the Confederate Generals find it expedient to throw scouts and advance-guards as far as thirty miles ahead. By this means they are speedily apprised of any aggressive movement on our part, and usually have abundance of time to make the necessary preparations for retreat or defence. BRAGG'S videttes fell back gradually as BUELL'S forces approached them; a few of them acted as couriers, and arrived at the rebel headquarters on the night of the 1st, with full particulars of our numbers, the names of our commanders, and the routes being taken by the different corps of our army. BRAGG had gone to Lexington, leaving Gen. POLK in command at Bardstown. POLK, on receiving news of our advance, dispatched couriers to Lexington, Frankfort and other points, so that, before the morning of the 2d, every rebel General in Kentucky was informed of our movements.

It was Gen. BUELL'S belief, when he left Louisville, that BRAGG would give him battle at Bardstown, and the statements of a few prisoners, taken on the first evening of our march, confirmed him in it. From all I can learn, I feel confident that it was BRAGG'S original intention to form a junction with KIRBY SMITH, and make a stand at Lexington or Danville. He learned in time, however, that BUELL'S army had been largely increased in effective force, and determined to avoid a collision with it.

The last of the rebel infantry left Bardstown on the night of the 3d or very early on the morning of the 4th. The order to vacate the place came from BRAGG'S headquarters at Lexington, on the night of the 2d, taking the Confederate troops very much by surprise. A strong rear-guard of cavalry, under Gen. WHARTON, was left behind, with strict orders to keep BUELL'S forces out of Bardstown until the evening of the 4th, even at the sacrifice of every man in the command. The object of this was to give the rebel wagon-train time to get fifteen or twenty miles ahead of the Federal forces, to prevent its capture by a sudden dash of our cavalry. WHARTON ambushed his men near the Bardstown Fair-ground, and rushed upon our advance-guard on the afternoon of the 4th. We did not enter Bardstown until the time specified by Gen. BRAGG—not because of WHARTON'S determined resistance, but because Gen. BUELL had changed the route of CRITTENDEN'S corps in the morning, and instead of permitting it to go direct to Bardstown, where it might have arrived in time to capture thousands of retreating rebels, and secure their train, he ordered it to march on the Bloomfield road. The result of the day's strategy was, that we kept Gen. BRAGG'S appointment, arriving in the town just at sunset. Thus, the first chance for striking a blow at the enemy was lost.

The rebels having left Bardstown, there was no necessity for a concentration of our forces in that vicinity. Accordingly, CRITTENDEN'S corps only entered the place. MCCOOK and GILBERT kept on toward Springfield, retaining the position on the left and centre. CRITTENDEN'S corps left Bardstown early on the morning of the 5th. It was now thought that the rebels might stand at Danville if hardly pressed. The pursuit was vigorous, but the flight was rapid. I have never seen troops more willing to accept hardships and privations for a patriotic purpose than our men appeared to be, with the hope before them of battling with the foe. Men, who had been assigned to the hospitals and ambulances, left their sick beds to shoulder their muskets, and marched uncomplainingly from early dawn until midnight, frequently suffering from hunger and thirst.

The next event of the campaign was the battle of Perryville. Facts and figures concerning this engagement have been given the public in regard to truth in many cases. The Louisville papers have seen in the battle the glorious development of one of Gen. BUELL'S best laid plans. From the tone of the Journal, I judge that had we been completely routed on the 8th, they would have pronounced it a trap to catch the Confederates at some distant day. So far from being the development of BUELL'S plans, the battle of Perryville was the frustration of them. It was reported at headquarters on the 7th that the enemy was in force at Perryville. The three army corps were then marching on that place by different roads. Gen. BUELL determined to surround the rebels if possible, and ordered all the divisions to march without delay, leaving their transportation behind. MCCOOK and GILBERT continued their march, but CRITTENDEN'S Corps lost half a day on a circuitous route to obtain water. It was no-Gen. BUELL'S intention that MCCOOK should attack the rebels, or that MCCOOK and GILBERT should do so, but that the entire army should participate in the fight. But BRAGG was too quick for him. He heard first that the Union forces were about to overwhelm him unitedly, and immediately began his retreat for Perryville. He afterward learned that MCCOOK and GILBERT were on the road, and that CRITTENDEN was not within supporting distance. Here, then, was a chance for him to make a dash upon two corps, defeat them if possible and afterward fall upon the third—if not, to get away before the arrival of the third. HARDEE'S Corps had retreated six miles, when it was ordered back to Perryville on the double quick. MCCOOK found himself in front of the rebel line of battle, with his men marching in column—no skirmishers out—nothing in front but a small advance guard, which foolishly attempted to attack upon the rebel videttes. The rebel infantry rushed upon MCCOOK, and a division of green troops had to be formed in line of battle under a heavy fire. The natural result was a stampede.

The moon never shone more brightly than on the night of the 8th. The rebels were in Perryville up to 10 o'clock. There was not a division commander in the army who did not expect to advance on the enemy before morning. Everything was ready—all our lines formed, and all our artillery on the ground. The rebel force was divided. Gen. SILL was between KIRBY SMITH and Perryville. The defeat of HARDEE, BUCKNER, and CHEATHAM, would have proved an easy task for the Army of the Ohio. But no advance was made. We waited for daylight, but the rebels did not. Some of our men, from one of the hills surrounding the town, witnessed the evacuation, and yet it was noon of the 8th before Gen. BUELL ascertained that there was no enemy immediately in front. The rebels of course claim a victory at Perryville, but I cannot see in what their triumph consisted. The battle was more barren of results to both parties than any engagement that has yet occurred in the Southwest. I do not think either BUELL or BRAGG would fight another such battle, knowing similar results to await it.

Our troops returned to Perryville on the evening of the 9th. It was now the general belief among officers of the army and citizens of the surrounding country, that the rebels had retreated to camp Dick Robinson, to make a desperate and determined resistance there.

Our spies reported up to the 12th that there was no indication of a removal of the immense train of spoils from the camp; but that, on the contrary, Winter quarters were being constructed, batteries planted and fortifications erected to make the stay of the rebels as permanent as possible.

The wary rebel General had learned what BUELL'S plan was, and the only way to frustrate it was for him to strike tents and commence his retreat toward Cumberland Gap. On the night of the 11th, the evacuation of the chosen stronghold began. Two lines of retreat were open to BRAGG, both leading to Cumberland Gap, the one via Richmond and Big Hill, through Madison County, the other the Crab Orchard Road via Mount Vernon and Barboursville. The two roads converge at Pitman's Junction, twenty-two miles from Mount Vernon, where we are at present encamped, and fifty-eight miles from Cumberland Gap. BRAGG'S only hope of escape was to get away before BUELL could send a force to Lancaster to head him off. The rebel plunder-train numbered over four thousand heavily laden wagons—a majority of which were captured from our forces in this State and Tennessee—several thousand beef cattle, 1,000 mules and 2,000 sheep. To get away with all this, and 80,000 men, under the eyes of the great army of the Ohio, was an undertaking which few would have attempted; but BRAGG has made the effort, and so far has been successful.

While we were lying at Danville, Gen. BUELL received the intelligence of BRAGG'S departure from Camp Dick Robinson. He was surprised to learn that the rebels were leaving their comfortable Winter quarters in progress of erection, and abandoning the strong natural fortifications, behind which they had sought shelter from our guns; probably he began to think that the preparations for a long stay were but an outward semblance to deceive him into a belief that his prey was secure, and that he had abundance of time to mature his plans. But now the old bird was forsaking the nest, and all exertions must be bent on taking him on the wing.

At midnight on the 12th, while we were all enjoying a slumber, doubly sweet after tiresome marches by night and day, a courier came dashing into camp from Gen. BUELL'S headquarters at Perryville, with an order for an immediate advance of the army. Transportation of all kinds was ordered to remain behind, nothing but ambulances to accompany the troops. By 1 o'clock A. M. we were on the road, making our way by dim moonlight to the retreating foe—then supposed to be passing through Stanford, a town distant nine miles from Danville. The march was a rapid one, but we arrived just in time to see the rear of the rear-guard passing along unmolested. Our cavalry and artillery were brought into requisition. The rebels, though few in numbers, determined to amuse us and themselves for awhile by the exchange of a few shots. They had a couple of howitzers, drawn by one mule each, and collectively known as the Jackass Battery, and about two regiments of cavalry, including the invincible Texas Rangers. With these their aim was to detain our army, while theirs pursued the even tenor of its way toward Cumberland Gap.

And right well did they accomplish their object. Familiar with the topography of the country, and taking advantage of it whenever favorable to them, they kept our entire force at bay until late in the afternoon, when, fully satisfied with what they had done, they continued their course toward Crab Orchard.

On the afternoon of the 13th, Gen. BUELL sent word from his headquarters at Perryville, that the rebels were retreating on the road leading from Stanford, ordering CRITTENDEN'S Corps to press them hard, and, if possible, bring them to battle. The troops were upon the road between Stanford and Danville. In Gen. SMITH'S Division rations were being issued to the men. The roads were completely blockaded—the rapid advance could not be made. The bird had flown, and the first effort to "take him on the wing" had failed. It appeared to me that leaving the Lancaster Road open for BRAGG'S retreat might have been a strategic movement to decoy the rebels into some other trap. This is the only way I could account for the escape, and, at the same time, believe BUELL was a General. Other traps may have been set, but BRAGG has stubbornly kept out of them thus far. And now, for the first time since we left Louisville, I saw indications of discouragement and disheartening on the part of our officers. Whatever may have been their opinions about BUELL'S march through Tennessee and Kentucky, and his administration of affairs until his arrival in Louisville, all seemed to have confidence in his skill and ability. When he again moved toward the enemy at the head of a reorganized and greatly increased force, and after the War Department had left him in command simply to redeem his character as a man worthy the leadership of a great army. But the belief had taken root in the minds of many officers whose opinions are entitled to consideration, that the enemy had been permitted to make good his retreat, and it became quite apparent that confidence in BUELL'S ability was on the wane. We scanned the State map in vain to find a point at which BRAGG might be overtaken. We heard of a force coming in behind the Confederates from Cincinnati. But what was the use of coming in behind a retreating army? Buell's force was already in that position, and the trouble was that it seemed impossible for them to get ahead of the rebels. We had left Louisville under the impression that BUELL would present to Gen. BRAGG the alternative to fight or surrender, but the indefatigable Southerner had refused to do either.

We encamped at Stanford on the evening of the 13th. The inhabitants of the town gave the Federal advance a cordial welcome with waving banners and pleasant smiles.

On the morning of the 14th, we were again on the march. The distance from Stanford to Crab Orchard is but ten miles; and we were not long in making it. When near the town the rebel rear guard again made its appearance in battle array. They had taken possession of a couple of hills, and were in good position to make a formidable resistance for a short time. Of course our entire column had to halt. Our artillery had to be brought in position—a line of battle had to be formed—a reconnoissance had to be made—an advance of skirmishers thrown out, and such details attended to as delayed us for several hours. During all this time BRAGG'S army was in full and unimpeded retreat. The same old story—the rear guard, after having kept us back as long as was consistent with their own safety, left in haste. We captured two of their howitzers—the only spoils of war that have fallen into our hands since our departure from Louisville. Another day's march found us at Mount Vernon, the county seat of Rockcastle County. We arrived day before yesterday, and have remained here since. Yesterday we were ordered to continue our march toward the Gap, but after proceeding a few miles, Gen. WOOD'S Division was ordered to halt. The divisions under Gens. VANCLEAVE and SMITH went on.

It is not probable that the entire army of the Ohio will march to the mountains, now that there is no possibility of meeting the enemy in Kentucky. On the hills and in the defiles between here and the State border, 10,000 men can do as much as 40,000 in resisting an enemy. Gen. MCCOOK'S corps, and a portion of Gen. GILBERT'S, are at Crab Orchard, and all the cavalry has been ordered to the rear, from the impracticability of obtaining forage in the mountain district.

Generals BRAGG and POLK passed the night of the 14th in Mount Vernon, at the houses of personal friends. In conversing about war matters, they expressed themselves perfectly satisfied with their success in Kentucky, so far as obtaining supplies was concerned.

The rebels, on the night of the 14th, seized every axe and hatchet they could find in Rockcastle County and used them in cutting down trees, so as to impede the progress of the Union forces through the mountain country. In places beyond London there are narrow roads for miles, with steep mountains, thickly wooded, on both sides. These roads can be rendered almost impassable in a very short time, by simply cutting down the timber here and there, and letting it lie where it falls.

It is evidently the programme of the rebels now to make an attempt to take Nashville, by a union of the forces of Ex-Gov. HARRIS with those of BRAGG and SMITH. It will require a rapid movement of BUELL'S army to checkmate them.

The Democratic Victories Appreciated at the South.

From the Richmond Examiner, Oct. 18.

Many anxious moments have passed since the commencement of the war. The fortunes of a nation have several times seemed to depend upon the turn of a single chance. Yet it is doubtful whether any period has yet occurred more burdened with suspense than the present.

A large portion of the Northern people evince the disposition for a return to the ordinary ideas of civilized society. If they can prove themselves a party sufficiently strong to secure their own safety, they will establish something like sane politics in the Northern States, and render their Government amenable to the laws of reason. Under these conditions, it is possible to see a termination to that carnival of the Devil now in full blast over the North American continent. But if the movement is shortly crushed out, measures will certainly be taken by the Abolitionist tyranny to prevent a recurrence of such menace to their power, by measures like those through which the leaders of the first French Revolution maintained their hold on a nation long disgusted with their crimes.

This is the matter to be decided at the next elections in New-York and other Northern States, now close at hand. If the men whose bold attempt to recover the ordinary liberties of an Anglo-Saxon people can elect their candidates, and so establish the fact that they constitute a majority, the tyranny at Washington will be rapidly reduced to insignificance. We know how quickly the mass of the people in the Northern States, and, indeed, everywhere else, rush to the winning side, and we can have no doubt but that LINCOLN and CHASE will have no other supporters of their usurpation, after such a defeat, than the Abolitionist fanatics who were wont to vote for GERRIT SMITH and GARRISON in the old elections of the United States. A reaction of public opinion, as irresistible as the tide of the sea, would be swiftly commenced; the principles on which American government is founded would reappear, and the instincts which have animated the race, with rare and temporary exceptions for a full thousand years, would resume their sway over the conduct of the nation. Then, and then only, will it be possible to stop the torrent of blood, and reduce the present war of extermination to an ordinary issue of arms.

It is difficult to believe that the majority of a people, sprung from free nations, and having at least a large admixture of Anglo-Saxon blood, can be resolutely bent, and deliberately decided, on government at home not less absolute than that which Russians prefer to freedom, with the concomitant perpetuation of a war abroad, such as the subjects of Gengis and Timour could only delight in hitherto. The people of the United States have given, in the last two years, every evidence necessary to prove that they are such a people. But, as the reader now sees, some bold men have dared to utter in their land the words of freedom, law and order, once most familiar to the ear. We shall soon know whether these words have still an echo; and we may well listen anxiously, for on the answer depends the duration of this war.

Destruction of a Government Vessel by Fire.

FOUR PERSONS BURNED TO DEATH—NARROW ESCAPE OF OTHERS.

Last night, a few minutes past 9 o'clock, a fire was discovered on board the schooner Elener, Capt D. TOWNSEND, in the employ of the Government, which was lying at anchor in the North River, in front of and a short distance from the Cunard Dock. The deck being loaded with hay, the flames spread with great rapidity, and in a few moments the vessel was enveloped in one entire sheet of fire. The Fire Department of Jersey City and of the lower districts in New-York turned out, but were unable to render any assistance, and for some time no information could be gathered as to the name of the vessel, or whether there were any persons on board. Several small boats from vessels in the vicinity were seen plying around, and finally one of them came ashore with the Captain, first and second mates, the steward and one of the crew—the latter badly burned about the face, hands and feet. The injured man, whose name is LEWIS R. HICKMAN, was taken to MEARS'S drug-store, in Montgomery-street, where his wounds were dressed, after which he was conveyed to the New-York Hospital.

When the fire broke out there were nine persons on board, consisting of seven persons belonging to the vessel and two passengers—all of whom were in bed at the time. Their names were as follows:

In the after-cabins: Captain, D. Townsend; first mate, James Jones; second mate, Benjamin Loveman; and the steward, John Sopers.

In the midship house adjoining the galley, Charles Cavalier, Joseph Cramer and Lewis R. Hickman, crew, and Robert Blank and Frank ——, passengers. As soon as the alarm was given the Captain, two mates and steward seized what clothing they could and, running out, lowered the small-boat from the stern and escaped.

One of the passengers rushed out from the midship house, but it being filled with burning hay and the flames leaping high into the air, he gave way and fell back. HICKMAN, barefooted, bareheaded, and but partially dressed, then rushed past him and dashed through the flames, and although badly burned and nearly suffocated, succeeded in making his way on to the jib-boom, from whence he was taken in a small-boat. He saw nothing of his four companions and there is no doubt but that they perished in the flames. The vessel was in the employ of the Government and was to have sailed for Fortress Monroe to-day with 80,000 brick, 500 barrels of cement, about 800 bales of hay and a quantity of coal.

The Elener is 279 tons measurement, was owned by T. RUNYON, Capt. TOWNSEND, and others of New-York, and was valued at $12,000, and it is thought there was no insurance.

The origin of the fire is not known. Some of the deck hands on the Jersey City ferryboat Gregory, which was crossing the river when the fire broke out, say that it was caused by the bursting or falling of the signal lantern.

For a time great apprehension was felt for the safety of vessels lying in the vicinity, owing to the high wind and the danger of the burning vessel getting adrift. She was held fast by the cable and burned to the water's edge.
